DEBATE ON THE TEMPERANCE BILL.

A NEW WARD IN NEW-YORK.

ONE AMONG THE RISING GENERATION.

Speech Manhattan on the Canada Bill.

MR. HEADLY IN CONTEMPT.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

ALBANY, Thursday, March 8.

The Temperance bill was the special order in the Senate yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Having been read, Senator WM. CLARK moved to strike out the section of the enacting clause relative to and extent of license. Upon this motion the debate opened, the motion advocating the striking out, and intimating that he would not vote for the bill if the clause was retained.

Senator WEBSTER was opposed to striking out the section, and should vote for the bill.

Senator VERMILYE was in favor of striking out the clause of search and destruction. He had voted for the bill last year under many apprehensions that the clause was not in accordance with the only ought to be stricken. He was glad to hear from the other side that a spirit of conciliation and compromise was to prevail. If such a feeling should exist, he should probably act with the friends of the bill. But if the contrary spirit were to obtain, those who were the especial friends of the bill must not count with any certainty upon his vote on the final passage.

Senator HOWESS thought the friends of the bill should be prepared to go for the bill as they should think advisable, and that those opposed to any law should not make propositions so much to the detriment of the general principles embodied in the measure. He regarded the question of search as one of expediency, and not a constitutional one.

Senator DEGRAFF hoped for the amendment of the bill and the striking out of the section allowing search, seizure and destruction. He was opposed to those features, and should endeavor to have them taken from the bill. He argued from the fact that the vote most strongly against the adoption of those features in the Assembly last year was from the Senatorial District from the City of New-York, that the people of that District, however, to be determined to vote for a prohibitory bill.

Senator GOODRICH who in favor of the passage of the bill in the shape in which it had been reported to the Senate. If they commenced amending the bill, it was difficult to tell where it would end.

Senators WILLARD were also in favor of the passage of the bill as it had passed the Assembly. He thought that by striking out votes in favor of the bill in the Assembly, which had been more than last year—the people had general discussion upon the principles embodied in the bill.

Senator MARSH took a similar view of the question. Progress was reported on the bill, without coming to a vote on the proposition to strike out.

It will probably be manifested that the bill to prevent intemperance carried twenty-one affirmative votes when it was on its final passage in the Senate last year. Among the affirmative votes were those of Messrs. WM. CLARK and WEBSTER. These gentlemen now give pretty clear intimations that they will not support that affirmative vote, unless the bill is essentially amended. Were any, then, two votes gone, and if so from whom were it to go. Adding the affirmative votes of last year, were lost of given under protest, if the protestants have had their fears strengthened much, they will probably fair year be found negative voters, and then there would appear to be but little prospect for the passage of the bill. My own convictions are, that there would have been conferred, and that there are more than those of the Senate "Ayes" who will oppose the passage of the bill now before the Senate.

The bill is again the special order for to-day at 4 o'clock, when it is probable Senator CHASE will introduce a substitute for the entire bill. The substitute will embrace the following principles:

1. To furnish the sale of liquors to be drank on the premises in the sale of wines and molasses, and then only to persons not to be drunk on premises.

2. To permit, by licensed and responsible, any person, from the manufacture.

3. To prevent the sale or distillation of any alcohol that rises high when or fire spirits, or whisky, when mixed or adulterated, or being more adulterated than usual, or to be sold or offered for sale, or be found in the State, or to be sold or offered for sale, or be found in the State, or to be sold or offered for sale, or be found in the State

THE COLLINS STEAMERS.

Speech of W. H. Seward,

IN THE SENATE, TUESDAY, FEB. 27, 1855.

MR. SEWARD—The Senate has been several days, I may, indeed, remember that on the first session of Congress, I committed what seemed to be, if not an error, at least an impropriety, not in saying too much, but talking too long, in favor of the Collins line of steamers. I plead, in extenuation of that course, that the Senate, in the night before the adjournment, after a long debate, had sustained the views which I then entertained, and which I now entertain; and that the next day, just before the final close of the session, when Senators were impatient to leave, and were leaving rapidly, it became doubtful whether the Senate, as it then existed, constituted, would not renounce those views. Therefore I deemed it necessary to guard against what would have been a surprise upon the majority of the Senate, who had voted in accordance with those views on the night before. I hope it is now a sufficient vindication of that action on my part, that the Senate itself, when it came together this session, confirmed those same views, and that the House of Representatives also, when it assembled this session, reconsidered its own position and adopted that to which I had labored so earnestly to bring the Senate. Having excused that impropriety, I will not now commit another abuse by speaking long upon this subject. I have sent for an honorable and distinguished Senator, of advanced age, who, I hope, will be here in a few moments. (Mr. CASS.) I rise merely to fill up a gap of time; and I know that such is the respect for that Senator entertained here that I shall be excused for this intrusion.

The Senator from Georgia, (Mr. TOOMBS,) has certainly convinced me, and no doubt every one else, that he is most sincere and in earnest in opposing this measure; but I think if he would review his own positions, he would not be satisfied with them, after he should have discovered how broad and how foreign is the ground that he has occupied.

Sir, I think the honorable Senator from Connecticut stated this case with admirable precision and accuracy. It is just exactly this: Here is a contract which the Government owes $858,000, and here is an annual appropriation bill, in which it is proposed to appropriate money to pay that sum of $858,000. No one here disputes that debt; no one here proposes that we shall withhold the money for any cause whatever; no one proposes that we shall pay a cent less than the $858,000. So far we are all agreed. It is money that is due by contract, and the contract itself cannot now be wisely, justly, or properly reviewed. So the money is due. What remains? Why, in making the appropriation to pay that sum, the House of Representatives—which originates bills of this kind, which originated the bill, at the last session, at this session, and must originate them at every session—has come to the conviction that it would be wise and just to repeal a clause in the law under which that contract was made, which authorized Congress to give notice, at its discretion, after the period of two years, of a purpose to discontinue the contract. That is all. The House propose that we shall repeal that clause; the question is, whether we shall or not. That is the whole question. Of all which has been said beyond that, I have only to say, that it is foreign to the question.

What reasons are given why we should repeal this clause? One alone of those reasons is sufficient to satisfy my mind—namely, that on an appropriation bill in the last week of the session, in the last hours of the fifth day from the close of the session, it is never wise unnecessarily to raise a conflict with the House of Representatives, because, in the first place, you jeopard the passage of a great bill; and in the next place you jeopard the passage of a great many other great and necessary bills. Accordingly, we are habitually accustomed to waive additions, stipulations and provisions which we should otherwise prefer, in order to secure agreement with the House of Representatives, and to bring the business of the Government to a successful and happy termination. All the hazards which can attend any bill will attend this, if returned to the House of Representatives; for whatever difference of opinion there is here, the same difference of opinion, we know, would exist there, and would engage that House in long, strenuous and earnest debate; whatever of feeling or of prejudice, whatever of passion or of interest attaches to this question here, would attend the bill if we send it back there, and it would be jeoparded, and might be lost. What are the consequences of that? The second time the faith of the Government is broken, and $858,000 due to citizens for services actually rendered under contract, is withheld—is not paid. That is bad enough; but besides that, some all the embarrassing consequences to other business.

To these considerations, what is the reply? It is that we have this power, and we please to keep it. It gratifies us to say that we will not relinquish the power of giving this notice. Why shall we not? If we are wise men, we will retain it, only because it is valuable for something; and if we are wise men, we shall give it up if it is not valuable. Now, what is it worth? Do we wish to give the notice now? There is only one honorable Senator who proposes to give that notice by virtue of the reservation contained in the contract. The whole Senate, comparatively, like the whole House, are ready to pay the money already accrued, without giving the notice. The contract has been in force for two years, and the legislation during that time has shown that it was not necessary or proper to give the notice heretofore. Then no cause has existed heretofore, and none at present exists, for giving this notice. Do you anticipate a state of things, when you will be required to give it? Are circumstances changed—changed favorably for the contractors and unfavorably for the Government? No, Sir; the mails are carried with the stipulated expedition; the pride and honor of the country are sustained; its service is completely performed, just as it was required to be; the Government has no cause of complaint, and anticipate none.

On the other hand the parties to whom it is contemplated that the notice may, in some circumstances, be given, have been unfortunate—unfortunate by a calamity that has touched the chords of the public heart most deeply, and which has so powerfully affected the mind of every individual in the country that it is painful to speak of it, even in the most public manner on so great an occasion as this. One of those ships, freighted with the lives of our fellow-citizens, has gone down into the depths of the sea. You have a bond that it shall be replaced; you wish the place of the ship supplied as it ought to be, and you expect that it will be supplied under the contract. The contractor says, If I must supply the place of this ship for the short period which remains of the contract, will you not release me from the condition which authorizes you arbitrarily to give notice that you will discontinue the contract? It seems to me a fair appeal. Upon what grounds is it postponed and sustained? Sir, it is sustained, and well sustained, upon this ground, that notwithstanding all the figures that have been arrayed here, this line, hard to the contractors as unprofitable contract—it is still as unprofitable contract. Their money has not been wasted, but it has been spent with energy and fidelity, with zeal and self-sacrificing liberality in carrying out their contract with the Government. Although this is true, it is nevertheless the fact that their stock is not now worth, never has been worth the par value, and, if their contract continues, there is no probability it will ever be worth more than sixty or seventy cents on the dollar.

The company who are to build another of these great steamships must do it with capital and with credit, either their own, or derived from some other source. Capitalists will not furnish the money to execute a contract which is in perpetual jeopardy of being annoyed by legislative authority. This, Sir, is a great consideration. It is one which ought to prevail, and must prevail, against a mere speculative advantage of having power to annul a contract—a power which you expect never to have occasion to exercise.

Other considerations, I know, have been adduced here in regard to the unpleasant circumstances which attend the advocacy of this bill and its discussion here. It is said that it brings what is called a question, and a taint upon the purity of Congress. Sir, it is our misfortune that we make an unnecessary population, and reserve in our hands a power, in consequence of which every opponent of this scheme about the purlieus of the Capitol, in the City of New-York, through the whole Union, all our patronage, all enemies, all hatred of COLLINS and his prosperity, will come here and combine together to urge Congress to discontinue the contract that their own private ends may be attained. Such as this is the opposition which we see before us. Here are men VANDERBILTS and others, rivals or competitors of the COLLINS line, who are pressing upon Congress to exercise this power of cancelling the contract, in order that they may have the benefit of it; and when the proprietors of the line come forward in great alarm and peril to defend their rights, they are told that their solicitations impair the dignity and taint the character of Congress!

Let us put an end, Sir, to these things, by laying upon control which is useless to us, which is injurious to the enterprise itself, and my word for it, you will never more hear one whisper of complaint throughout the land against the Collins line.

Sir, I remember the history of this case when it was here before. I remember that the same threats and intimidations were offered, the same apprehensions and alarms were excited, and the same suspicions were shown everywhere in the public mind; and members of Congress were afraid to vote the allowance which they believed to be just, because they thought the public would not comprehend the importance of the line; but the law passed, and for a time there was peace. Until the close of the last session of Congress, there was one universal acclaim of joy, satisfaction, and gratitude throughout the country, for the public spirit with which Congress had sustained this great national enterprise. Prejudice is raised against this line on the ground of Mr. VANDERBILT's offer. Sir, Congress required ships of a certain size and magnitude, combining elegance, solidity, durability, and swiftness, and COLLINS furnished them. They obtained by this contract just what was required. The contractors have given just what was proposed, and even more. Now VANDERBILT comes and says, "Dispense with some of these requirements, and I will carry your mails by furnishing you with ships of my own on cheaper terms." Could you accept that proposition of VANDERBILT justly, without, at the same time, taking the Collins steamers and paying for them? and if you do that, I wish to know what you will make by discontinuing your contract with COLLINS, and entering into a contract with VANDERBILT.

Again, it is said by some Senators, that this is an extravagant, a lavurious line. Sir, this line of steamers is, in my judgment, the proper diplomatic representative of the United States to the Old World. Who is there here that hesitated last Saturday to give a salary of $17,000 a year to the Minister at the Court of St. James—a salary with which he might maintain himself in a style worthy of the representative of this great Republic? Who is there that refused to give a salary of $15,000 to the American Minister sent to France, and of $12,000 to the Minister to Spain. Who is there that denies the justice of the appeal, that he who represents his country abroad, in its diplomacy, shall maintain the dignity of his country there? But, Sir, this line of ships—the strongest in the world, and the swiftest in the world—this diplomatic messenger traversing the ocean both ways, exchanges the salutations and the greetings of men and of nations in both hemispheres, while it opens the way for the establishment of mutual commerce between the ports of our own land and all the ports of the European continent. It is the pride of my heart that I can see that line sustained in its strength, its power, its elegance, its majesty. Sir, would you tell me that that proud position which you occupy would be just as dignified, and that you could perform your duties just as well if I should strip away all that drapery from above your head? Would you say that the Senate of the United States would lose nothing in dignity if I should strike down at a blow that beautiful colonade, and bring down that noble dome to the level of the ceilings of barracks in a military station? Would you say that was an economy in the Government necessary to be practiced by a great people?

Sir, the Collins line is the great mail carrier between Europe and America. I shall sustain it cheerfully now, and always, with every contribution which is necessary, and I shall endeavor to extend similar lines of communication across the Pacific, until we shall have encircled the world with the couriers of intelligence, and the instructions of civil and religious liberty.

I have one additional observation, and then I shall close. We are told that this is a monopoly, and that it is no way to encourage a steam marine by creating a monopoly. Sir, it is the way, and the only way, in which you can bring a steam marine into existence. It is thirty years since Dr. LARDNER predicted that steam would never be a self-sustaining agent upon the ocean. When the first steamer crossed from Bristol to New-York, the world derided the short-sightedness of the great philosopher. But, Sir, what is the fact? Thirty years have elapsed, and, although steam is so necessary and useful an agent, it is not yet self-sustaining as a navigating power across the Atlantic ocean, nor across any other ocean; and you have your choice either by the Government to aid and sustain steam lines, or to do without them altogether. It is true, the time will come when it will not be necessary to render this aid; but until that time shall come it is most wise, and just, and prudent to sustain it in this way. Honorable Senators tell us, if you will withdraw Government patronage you will have enough competitors. Sir, has not Government effectually withdrawn its patronage from railroads and left private individuals to build them? Yet what have you seen? There has never been built in the United States, nor in England, nor in France, nor in Germany, although the railroad discovery is forty years old, a railroad that was not built by a monopolizing railroad company, aided sometimes, and in this country often, by the money of Government. The Erie Canal, the most successful work of internal improvement ever made, was not built by a private company, nor by a company with its own money. On the contrary, it may be doubted whether it would ever yet have been built had it not been adopted by New-York, and constructed as a great national work.

The Late Judge Sheldon.

The following extract from a letter addressed to Hon. DANIEL CADY of Johnstown, Fulton County, by a friend of the late Judge SHELDON, and the answer of Judge CADY, were called forth by an article published in this paper in February last, and sufficiently explain their object. We insert them with great pleasure in this journal:

FEBRUARY 21, 1855.

HON. DANIEL CADY—Dear Sir: The writer of "a biographical sketch," published in the New-York TIMES, in alluding to the trial of "SOLOMON SOUTHWICK" in 1812, on an indictment for an attempt to bribe ALEXANDER SHELDON, Speaker of Assembly, after stating that the cross-examination of SHELDON was conducted by you, remarks "it convinced the Jury that SHELDON was quite as willing to accept a bribe, as SOUTHWICK was to offer it."

The connection in which this remark stands, would indicate that it was simply the intent of the writer to attribute the convictions of the Jury to the skill with which the cross-examination was conducted; but as the writer has omitted to guard his readers against another interpretation, some may suppose that he intended to cast an imputation upon the integrity of the witnesses as well as to bestow a compliment upon the skill and ingenuity of the counsel who cross-examined him. The deep interest felt at the time by the public in anything relating to the grant of the Charter to the Bank of America; the high standing of the accused, and the principal witness against him; their prominent political positions, the number and time of the distinguished counsel engaged, together with the bitter and rancorous spirit which characterized the political controversies of that day, all contributed to impart to "the SOUTHWICK trial" a popular interest, seldom equaled, and perhaps never exceeded by any other which has occurred in this State.

But with the lapse of time political asperities died away, and political rancor subsided, and I have always supposed that public sentiment in Montgomery County, where Judge SHELDON resided, and where the people had the best means of forming a correct judgment, had long since settled this matter in favor of his integrity.

He was soon after the trial appointed first Judge of Montgomery County, and made one of the best Common Pleas Judges that ever adjudicated in that county.

He was afterwards elected a member of the Convention which framed the Constitution of 1821, and several years after that occupied a seat in the Assembly of this State. His integrity in the discharge of the duties of these respective offices was never questioned.

My object in writing is to obtain from you, if consistent with your views of truth and justice, a statement for publication, that shall leave no equivocal meaning to the paragraph in question. By so doing you will relieve Judge SHELDON's friends from the injury inflicted upon their feelings from what they consider a carelessly guarded remark, if not intended as an unjust imputation. With great respect, &c.

JOHNSTOWN, Feb. 22, 1855.

DEAR SIR: I have this moment received your favor of the 21st inst. Although I saw the article in the New-York TIMES to which you allude, I cannot have read the whole of it, as I did not discover that it contained anything in relation to the trial of Mr. SOUTHWICK; and I have no copy of the article to enable me to judge whether the objectionable part of it is susceptible of two interpretations. Although I was retained by Mr. SOUTHWICK, I took no part in the cross-examination of Judge SHELDON—that was conducted wholly by BENJAMIN FOOT, Esq. Nothing that occurred on that trial over far one moment diminished the friendship between Judge SHELDON and myself, and I never had a doubt of his integrity as a gentleman, a legislator, or a Judge.

I am, dear Sir, yours, respectfully,

DANIEL CADY.

THE OSTEND CONFERENCE.

British and French Intervention in the Cuban Question.

Mr. Marcy to Mr. Buchanan.—Extract.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, July 8, 1854.

SIR: * * * I ought not to conclude this communication without indicating the views of the President in relation to the intervention of Great Britain in conjunction with France, in the affairs of Cuba. These Powers proposed to this Government in April, 1853, to enter into a tripartite convention for guaranteeing the Spanish dominion over Cuba. The proposition was very properly declined by this Government. To this course neither England nor France could justly take exceptions; but they have conjointly expressed dissatisfaction with certain parts of the letter of my predecessor, Mr. EVERETT, rejecting their overture. In a future dispatch, I may submit to you the President's opinions upon this joint protest, so far as regards it, against some of the doctrines contained in that letter, for the purpose of having them formally canvassed by the constitutional officers of the Government of Great Britain. At this time, I shall only state the fact, that a distinct intimation is conveyed by both England and France, that they will resist the transfer of Cuba to the United States, and assist Spain in case of any foreign interference in aid of the Cubans, whether openly or covertly applied, in any attempt they may make to escape from the Spanish yoke.

The ships of England and France in sending their ships of war on to our coast during the late disturbances respecting that Island, without previous notice or specification of their object, and the supervision they claimed the right to exercise along that coast, were—to use the mildest expression—not respected as this Republic. The fact cannot be disguised that both England and France suspect the United States of a design to detach from Spain the Island of Cuba, and appropriate it to themselves, without regard to the rights of Spain, or regard to the laws of nations. The simultaneous movement on that occasion is unquestionable evidence that they then indulged that belief. There is nothing in the history of our past course as a nation to justify such unworthy suspicions. It is true we have in the last half century greatly enlarged our territories, and so have Great Britain and France enlarged theirs; but we have done it in a manner that may proudly challenge the most rigid scrutiny of mankind. In our territorial expansion international law has been observed; the rights of others rigorously respected; nothing, in short, has been done to justify the slightest suspicion of rapacity. The Government of the United States is not unwilling to submit its whole public conduct in this, or indeed in all other respects, to the most scrupulous examination. But if our course has been openly, marked by honor and honest intention, England and France should reluctantly be our accusers. We need go no further back than to the British orders in council, and the imperial decrees of France, to show that we have been the victim of the broken law of nations—not the violators of that law. We have not encroached upon Governments or wrested from feeble dynasties possessions which they have held for ages to add new dominions to our own; but every acquisition we have made has been obtained by an equivalent voluntarily accepted. Besides, the United States may feel deeply interested in the destiny of Cuba. They will never consent to its transfer to either of the intervening nations, or to any other foreign State. They would regret to see foreign powers interfere to sustain Spanish rule in the Island, should it provoke resistance too formidable to be overcome by Spain herself.

When oppression over a colony or dependency is so severe as to excite revolt, and that revolt becomes too strong to be suppressed by the power which provokes it, the oppressor has assuredly no better right to invoke foreign aid, nor any better excuse for employing it, than the victims of arbitrary sway have to solicit it from the same quarter. When it was understood that Spain had applied to the allied Sovereigns of Europe for assistance to recover her revolted colonies in America, the Government of the United States protested in emphatic terms against such a procedure; and if the protest had failed in its object, this Government would undoubtedly have had resources to other means to arrest such interference.

It is intimated, though not authoritatively announced, that it is the design of Spain, whenever she clearly perceives that she can no longer retain possession of Cuba, to transfer the Island wholly or in part to any other power at the hazard of making it a source of annoyance to this country; and that England is disposed to concur in such a measure. Though unwilling to believe that such a scheme is entertained by Spain, or could be concurred in by England, yet the suggestion is not too idle to attract some attention. We do not complain that Great Britain enforces her treaty stipulations in regard to the emancipation in Cuba; but if it should prove to be true that she is using her influence in furtherance of a design to fill that Island with emigrants from Africa, in order that when Spanish rule over it shall cease, it may become an African colony, given over to barbarism, she ought to be conscious that she is concurring in an act which in its consequences must be injurious to the United States. Africans thus imported and held in limited servitude, and slaves now on the Island converted into apprentices, would constitute but another form of Slavery, and it requires the test of experiment to show how far such a substitute, under the horrible abuses which would attend it, would mitigate the evils of the present system.

Cuba, whatever be its political condition, whether a dependency or sovereign State, is, of necessity, our neighbor. It lies within sight of our coast. In carrying on trade between some of our principal cities, our vessels must pass along its shore. Intercourse with it is unavoidable. Standing in that geographical relation, it is imperative upon us to require from it, whatever may be its condition, all the observances imposed by good neighborhood. It must be to the United States no cause of annoyance in itself, nor must it be used by others as an instrument of annoyance.

Great Britain, which has so many reasons for maintaining amicable relations with this country, should be unwilling to hazard the interruption of them by countenancing or concurring in any measure in regard to Cuba which in its consequences would be adverse to the welfare or tranquillity of this Union.

You are instructed to ascertain as fully as possible, the views of the British Government in regard to Cuba, and what arrangements, if any, she has entered into or contemplates with Spain, either by herself or conjointly with France, relative to that island.

We should very much regret that the general condition of things in Cuba, or any particular occurrence there, should be such as to act so powerfully upon the feelings of individuals among us as to impel them to any irregular action, and to embark, as some have done, in unlawful enterprises against that island; but if, unhappily, that should be the case, the Government of the United States will do its whole duty to Spain, and use all the repressive means authorized by law, or required by honor, to restrain our citizens within the limits of duty. In this respect Spain will have no good cause to complain, or any other nation a fair occasion to intervene.

If Cuba were more favored in her condition as the dependent of a foreign power, and enjoyed the political rights which have wisely been granted to Canada and other favored provinces; if restrictions upon her foreign trade were relaxed, our Government would be much less embarrassed in maintaining our neutral relations with Spain; and speculations upon the future destiny of Cuba, either as an independent State, or in her present or any new association, would cease to be a matter of deep interest, both on this and the other side of the Atlantic.

While other nations owe duties to Spain, she owes reciprocal duties to them. At the earliest practicable period after our Federal Union was formed this government interdicted the Slave trade. In all sections of our country it is regarded as an odious and wicked traffic. The act of Congress prohibiting it has been most faithfully observed in every part of our Union; but Spain, though under the most solemn obligations to abstain from it, has, as there are abundant reasons to believe, connived incessantly at the infraction of these obligations, and tolerated the introduction of many thousands of African Slaves annually into Cuba. What we view with sentiments of abhorrence, and have rigidly interdicted, we do not like to see practised at our own doors. In spite of all that has been promised by Spain, and all that has been done by other powers, to suppress the Slave trade, the possession of Cuba by Spain favors its continuance, and is a formidable obstacle to its suppression.

The strong desire to have this evil remedied, and the belief that it will cease with the Spanish rule over that Island, have contributed in no considerable degree to strengthen the opinion here entertained by many individuals, that policy and humanity alike favor its separation from a country which abuses the connection. If you should ascertain that Great Britain has entered into such engagements with Spain to uphold this connection with Cuba under any modification of it which is likely to be injurious to the United States, or to the well-being of the Governments on this Continent, you will have recourse to such arguments and persuasions as, in your judgment, will induce her to abandon them. * * * * *

I am, Sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. L. MARCY.

JAMES BUCHANAN, Esq., &c., &c., &c.

Official.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, March 5, 1855.

The following translation of a note from the COMTE DE SARTIGES to Mr. MARCY is published for general information:

LEGATION OF FRANCE TO THE UNITED STATES, WASHINGTON, March 4, 1855.

SIR: It appears from information which has reached the Imperial Commission, for the Universal Exhibition that the different States of the Union intend each to appoint several Commissioners, to represent the interests of their exhibitors at Paris, and that the State of New-York in particular has selected four Commissioners for that purpose. This Commission, struck with the inconvenience which would be occasioned by the presence of so large a number of delegates, has decided that it will only admit one from each State in the Union, leaving it to those among them who have appointed several Commissioners to designate the one who shall place himself in official relation with the Imperial Commission.

I hasten, Sir, to inform you of this decision, praying you, at the same time, to give it all desirable publicity; and I seize this occasion to renew to you the assurance of my high consideration.

SARTIGES.

To Hon. Mr. MARCY,
Secretary of State, &c., Washington.

The family of Marshal Ney, Prince ELCHINGEN, is about to publish a volume of his private letters. This collection, certain to be interesting, independent of its literary merits, will commence with La Vendée, and terminate with the war in the Crimea.

Richard Wagner.

We continue from the columns of the Musical Gazette the following critical and appreciative article on this new light in the Musical firmament. It is a valuable contribution to Musical Literature; the only one on this subject, indeed, which treats comprehensively, and from acquaintance, of all the works of the composer. RICHARD WAGNER has been aptly termed the "Red Republican of Music." Whatever the immediate success of the revolution into which he has thrown himself, good must come of it. A more intimate connection of sound and sense is, to say the least of it, desirable. It is for this that WAGNER is striving, extravagantly perhaps, but sincerely.

RICHARD WAGNER was born in the year 1813, in Leipzig. He belonged to a well-known theatrical family; one of whom (his brother) is the father of that brilliant singer JOHANNA WAGNER. Under these circumstances, a neglected education was a matter of course, and the more, as his parents died while he was yet very young, leaving the boy to himself. In such interesting company, he of course learned nothing which he could not claim as entirely his own, although his method of learning was, as he himself confesses, solely by imitation. He imitated everything he saw or heard. Was it a symphony of BEETHOVEN; he composed a symphony; was it a drama at the theatre; he wrote a drama; and all this without having the slightest idea of the rules for musical or literary composition; a very original proceeding, decidedly; and at that time he could already claim that he had a style of his own. With every step forward in life, he of course changed his opinions, his tastes, and his desires. Having had no sound fundamental education, guided by no established principles in art, his mind oscillated from one point to another; and whenever a system, a name, any production of an artistic or dramatic kind began to attract the public, there was always a certain young man, RICHARD WAGNER by name, who desired and endeavored to accomplish the same. In the course of a few years he was, by turns, a devotee of BEETHOVEN, WEBER, and—BELLINI!

WAGNER pursued his musical studies—that is, he learned everything by himself, and in his own way. At last, he received a call to Magdeburg, (Prussia,) as chef d'orchestre. Here his first opera, with the words of his own, "The Novice of Palermo," appeared and vanished—the latter quite as speedily as the former. From Magdeburg, WAGNER went to Riga, invested with the same office in his new residence; and at last to Paris, with an immense amount of hopes, illusions, and poetical musical subjects, but with very little money, or knowledge of the language. It was perhaps the worst time Mr. WAGNER could have chosen for trying his fortunes in Paris, in 1839, when that system of frivolity, demoralization, and corruption, which led to the revolution of 1848, was at its height. Almost the whole of society seemed imbued with one feeling, one desire, one thought—that of enjoyment, cost what it might. The German dreamer and philosopher was soon obliged to abandon his dreams and his philosophy—all those high-flown expectations of glory and fortune with which so many young-hearted enthusiasts came and still come to Paris. Instead of all this, misery, painful misery—such as so many famous and infamous aspirants for the favor of the public have experienced in the French metropolis. We remember seeing him at times, in Paris, moving in the society of artists like an embodied consciousness of something better in art than Parisians could understand or estimate. At last, Mr WAGNER was forced to do as other opera composers have done before him, and as all other will probably do after him: he was obliged to find his weekly labor at the music stores, arranging the operas of others—the musical tit-bits of the day; which at that time were in the works of MEYERBEER and HALÉVY, or of ADAM, at the Opera Comique. Besides this, he wrote some articles for La Gazette Musicale, which, it is said, are now to be collected and republished—a proceeding we should not advise, since the views of Mr. WAGNER at that time might be found to differ a little from those he now advocates. The proof of this is to be found in the fact that he deemed the grand, historic opera of MEYERBEER worth imitating—not, indeed, in its bad elements, but in its best. He therefore wrote "Rienzi," (words and music,) a long, exciting and somewhat noisy opera, in five acts, with a few successful pieces, (especially the one generally called "Chorus of Peace;") but, as a whole, much more fatiguing, both for singers and the public, than anything MEYERBEER has written. He exerted himself to the utmost to have this work, composed under the most trying circumstances, performed at the Academie Royale; but the means of a poor man, such as WAGNER was, were entirely inadequate to such a difficult task.

Disgusted with Paris, its public and its artists, M. WAGNER renewed his travels, and once more returned to his own country. Here, at last, fortune began to smile upon him. By some mysterious influence, (some say MEYERBEER took part in it,) he was elected chef d'orchestre of the Royal Theatre at Dresden—the same office which he had formerly held elsewhere. This was really a brilliant change for WAGNER, and the road to fame and wealth lay open before him. The first thing at which he set himself was, of course, the mise en scene of his "Rienzi." We heard the opera at Hamburg. It was the longest performance of an opera we have ever witnessed in Germany, and certainly one of the loudest. The libretto pleased us most; it was cleverly written, well adapted to the scenes, and with some truly poetical situations. But while the poet triumphed, the musician failed entirely; decidedly for such opera music, the composer had not half the knowledge and experience of MEYERBEER. The grand historical opera having failed, Mr. WAGNER considered that it might be the better to return to another style, which he had before tried. He drew forth his "Fliegender Holländer," a three-act opera, based upon the well-known legend of the Flying Dutchman. This work obtained no hold upon the public, notwithstanding the very poetical subject upon which it was based. Then came the "Tannhäuser," another fable, based upon an old German legend, and introducing well-known names and personages of the middle ages. But in spite of all this, "Tannhäuser" achieved only a fiasco. The Dresden public, the only one which at that time assisted at the trials of the musician-poet, generally believed that their opera conductor had become deranged; so strange, so out of place and devoid of sense seemed a work which, after all, is nothing but the common opera, prepared with somewhat better and more poetical means than usual.

Once more he became disgusted with the present; and when, in 1848, the revolution broke out, managed to compromise himself sufficiently to be obliged to flee into exile. He went to Zurich, having gained some experience, but with a dark and cloudy future before him. He had to commence anew. What was to be done? The first thing was to satisfy absolute necessities; and the only way that occurred to him to accomplish this was the writing of some revolutionary pamphlets upon musical matters. A very short one first appeared, under the title of Die Revolution and die Musik, followed shortly after by Das Kunstwerk der Zukunft, a literary work which laid the first stone of his present fame, and had the most decided influence upon his further career. It was this work which the leaders of the Schumann party in Leipzig seized hold of; it inspired them so greatly, that henceforth they swore by nothing but the Art-work of the Future; it was this literary inspiration which created the famous "future music" and "future men"—names which are applied to all that appertain to the Wagner party; that is to say, who support not only those views which can only be adapted to the future, but also those which may be derived from the present musical works of WAGNER.

It is attributable entirely to LISZT, and the incessant notes* of some few, together with shameful attacks in the leading journal of the party, upon every one who merely seemed indifferent, or not to agree in all points with the views of WAGNER, that the public at large began to look upon that man, excited by a desire to see and hear something of him. Of course, WAGNER himself was not slow to profit by the opportunities afforded. The next book he gave to the public was his Oper und Drama, in which he makes some fearful attacks upon modern composers of opera, more especially upon MEYERBEER, and claims, of course, all praise and respect for the drama. His Opera and Drama is, in fact, nothing but a completion of the ideas professed in his Art-work of the Future, with all sorts of criticisms upon other subjects, among which is the sottenness of present artistic society; something which had been done before him, and which will be done after him, with more truth, and as the result of deeper observation.

The third literary work published by Mr. WAGNER contained the poems of his three musical pieces, "Der Fliegende Holländer," "Tannhäuser," and "Lohengrin," prefaced with due remarks to his friends, for whom he professes love; for love and friendship, with Mr. WAGNER, are one and the same thing. This work is decidedly the most curious of all, not on account of the poems, but from the manner with which the author accepts the title of genius, and tells his friends how he came to be a genius. He tells, moreover, that his task is finished; that necessity alone had driven him to accept the office of critic, in order to explain to the world the need of another musical art than that to which it had been accustomed; that henceforth he would create the things needed, and would be nothing else than a poet-musician. As to the poems contained in the book, they are neither dramas nor operas, but legends in the frame of dramatic scenery. It is true, they are better and more carefully written than opera libretti usually are; there is far more poetical feeling in them; but such is at the best only a fragment of a drama, not the whole drama itself.

While this was going on in the literary world, LISZT, at Weimar, forced the introduction of his three operas upon the stage. The public did not at first like or wish for them; but, permitted for a length of time to listen to nothing else, they at last took a fancy to them, and we can readily believe that these pieces are at present favorites with the public of that city. But a success at Weimar has no great influence upon the managers of the German theatres; a success upon some more important stage was absolutely necessary. Where would this be more appropriate than in that town from which the most noise about WAGNER went forth—in Leipzig? And at last "Tannhäuser" was put upon the stage in that city. Most people went at first from curiosity, but as the students were constantly at hand to instruct, explain, and clear up what seemed unintelligible, the majority soon began to appreciate the merits of the piece. "Tannhäuser achieved, in reality, a decided success in Leipzig. Now, what is this "Tannhäuser?" Is it an opera, a musical drama, melodrama, or what is it? We must confess that we cannot answer this question. There are arias, duos, ensembles, chorus; all as they are found in an opera, but WAGNER and his friends assure us that "Tannhäuser is not an opera! Is it a drama? If such a man is its principal personage—a man without principle or character, irresolute and uncertain; now turning toward this, now toward that, and continually swayed by exterior circumstances—if such a hero can be the appropriate centre of a drama, "Tannhäuser" may be one. And yet, there is something of a drama in the music; interesting, characteristic music, if you will, although the libretto is decidedly wanting in character. But there is some effective music; the finale of the second act, the song of the shepherds in the last act, the chorus of pilgrims, are pieces which will move all such as are wont to be moved by the beautiful and the grand. But is there anything new in the ideas or the construction? The instrumentation is always full, and sometimes too heavy; but that is nothing new. The orchestration is very often so thick that the principal idea intended to express the sense of the words is quite lost. Neither can this be called very new, as many German composers excel in this. No; for our own part, we have found nothing new in "Tannhäuser," if we except some abrupt modulations, and the constant anxiety to represent in the music the idea of the scenes and of the words, as clearly as possible, without sufficient care for that which is well-sounding and melodious.

From Leipzig, "Tannhäuser" made the rounds of all the principal stages of Germany, with the exception of Vienna, Dresden, and Berlin; exceptions caused, most probably, by political reasons. Not so with "Lohengrin;" the public would not endure nearly four hours of uninterrupted recitative, and "Lohengrin" made an unequivocal fiasco. Now this is the piece which must be considered as the real touch-stone of the sympathy of the public for the music of the new school, because "Lohengrin" really offers something new, at least new in our day. There is no cessation, no rest for the instrumentalists, the singers, or the public; the action moves on continually, accompanied by the music, with the exception of one or two short phrases where the orchestra stops, producing somewhat of a melo-dramatic effect. The whole is nothing but a long and tiresome recitative. Still, from a musical and poetic point of view, this is the best that WAGNER has written; and whenever his friends claim for him the name of genius, they may securely and triumphantly point to the musical characterization of Elsa, and to the love-scene between her and Lohengrin. Here are combinations of tones which no one but a genius could have drawn from the mysteries of nature. But, as a whole, "Lohengrin" has not met with that sympathy from the public, which might have been anticipated from the success of "Tannhäuser." It has been given here and there; according to some friendly papers, meeting a most enthusiastic reception; but it has, in fact, failed to secure a place in the repertoires of the theatres. Curiosity is the basis of the dramatic action of "Lohengrin", and curiosity may be said to be the principal cause of the attendance of the public upon its representation.

"Lohengrin" is the last known production of WAGNER, with the exception of some articles published in the journals in regard to his operas or his own interests. At present, he is engaged upon the composition of a tetralogy, in which the most prominent of the legends of the Edda are worked up in a dramatic form. The four connected dramas are, "Rheingold," "die Walküre," "der junge Siegfried," (the young Siegfried,) and "Siegfrieds Tod," (the death of Siegfried.) Wagner had already finished the last named poem in 1849, and it was printed in the Spring of 1853. But only for his friends and acquaintances. In the Autumn of 1853, he commenced the composition of "Rheingold," which was completed in the Spring of 1854. The "Walküre" is at present about half ready. The whole (the four dramas together,) have the title, "The Ring of the Niebelungen." What the result and fate of all this will be, lies concealed in the future. But as WAGNER himself makes it a sine qua non that these dramas are to be performed on three consecutive evenings, it is not difficult to anticipate but little sympathy from the public from these new inspirations, even if curiosity should attract them to see the old song of the Niebelungen put upon the stage. Perhaps we may witness some curious changes in the views of Mr. WAGNER after he shall have made a season's stay in London; as, undoubtedly, changes will be produced in the opinions of some English critics. Be this as it may, at present we may say that RICHARD WAGNER is neither more nor less than one of those men who anticipate a new phase in art; who represents the end of an old period of art, but not the beginning of a new one. Whenever, in past time, art has been about to make a forward step, there have been those who, by their powers of reflection and critical ability, have heralded and preluded its approach. WAGNER is such a man, and, as such, he will most certainly not be forgotten by the future historian.

NEW-YORK CITY.

Fire Department—Hydrant Companies—Chief Engineer Decided.

The Committee on the Fire Department, (Board of Aldermen,) met at the City Hall on Wednesday evening. Present—Aldermen HOWARD, Chairman; Aldermen TROWBRIDGE and BAIRD, and ALFRED CARSON, Esq., Chief Engineer.

THE HYDRANT COMPANIES.

Alderman HOWARD stated that he had received a letter from James E. Washick, Jr., Foreman of Hope Company No. 36, who had signed the petition referred to, in which he said that he was now in fears of having them disbanded.

ALFRED CARSON, Esq., Chief Engineer, on the request of the Committee, was examined, and said that Hydrant Companies were not really necessary to the Department, but having joined in good faith, he thought they ought not to be summarily disbanded, and that the best way would be for the Common Council to direct that they should not be allowed to receive any new members, and thus they would gradually become extinct.

The Chief said further, in answer to a question by Alderman TROWBRIDGE, that in his opinion, Hook and Ladder duty was the most onerous duty in the Department, and that fifteen men are sufficient for Hose Companies, and even than they could do the duty now performed by Hydrant men.

A resolution from the Board of Engineers and Foremen, requesting the Common Council to disband Hydrant Companies, adopted by a vote of 51 to 32, was then read.

The Chief was again examined, and said that Hydrant Companies were formed for the purpose of allowing firemen who had been disabled in the discharge of their duty, to finish serving their time in the Department. A great deal has been said about these Companies not having done good duty, but to my knowledge Hydrant Companies Nos. 2, 3 and 4 have turned out as force as many men in proportion to the number allowed them, as any Fire Company in the Department, and have performed all the duty required of them by law; but for all that, I do not consider them of any benefit, except to report hydrants that are out of order.

Alderman Trowbridge—Don't you think it would be a good plan to permit firemen who have served three or four years, or who have been disabled in the discharge of their duty, to join these Companies and finish out their time?

Chief—I do. That was the law when Hydrant Companies were first organized.

Alderman Howard—Then you think that these hydrant men should all be regular? [Laughter.]

THE RESULT.

The Committee agreed unanimously to report to allow three at present member of Hydrant Companies to serve out their time, with a resolution directing the Chief Engineer not to receive any returns of new members.

By this decision, Hydrant Companies will be defunct in about five years.

The case of John Tucker, of Hose Company No. 3, was next considered.

Alderman Howard to Mr. Tucker—The Committee have decided to direct your name to be erased from the Firemen's Register. From the time you joined until you sent in your resignation, you were not a citizen of the United States. It is a "hard case," but the law regulating the Department, the Committee are bound to enforce.

In the matter of organizing Abijah Barker and his associates as an engine company, in the place of Engine Company No. 18, disbanded, Alderman HOWARD said that the Committee decided to refer the matter to the Chief Engineer, with power.

The Chief objected to this, as it was a matter referred to the Committee by the Board of Aldermen, but if they would give him full power to select a company, he would not object to consider the matter.

Alderman Howard—No; but the Committee will do as you pay in regard to organizing this company.

Alderman Trowbridge—I cannot agree to this—we have no right to refer this matter to the Chief—we don't wish to. Let us decide for ourselves, and take the responsibility. The Chief has enemies enough.

Chief—That is a matter that never troubles me in the least.

Alderman Howard—The Committee wish to delegate to you.

Chief—Then I would suggest that the Committee report to the Board to that effect. I don't wish to decide on men I know nothing of. I must therefore decline to act.

Alderman Baird—Mr. Chief, do we need any more Fire Companies?

Chief—No, Sir. There are already more Companies than are necessary. If any location requires a company, one should be taken from a section of the City where there are too many.

The Committee decided to non-concur with the Board of Councilmen.

Reports from Board of Councilmen to repair house and to furnish a new carriage for Hose Company No. 19. The Committee agreed to concur.

The Committee then adjourned until Wednesday next.

A Den of Infamy Rested.

Yesterday morning the police of the Sixth Ward, under direction of Captain DOWLING, succeeded in breaking up a notorious den of infamy on the Five Points. They arrested the following females: Josephine Decker, Margaret McCormick, Sarah McDonald, Elizabeth Cox, Hannah Diamond, Ellen Simpson, Mary Anne Smith, Anne Riley, Delia Patrick, Mary Brown, Mary McGoldrick, Margaret Gloster, Mary O'Donnell, Mary Anne Stewart and Bridget Moore, fifteen young females; and Thomas McDonald, of No. 66 Park-street, Patrick McGrory, of No. 374 Baxter-street, and Andrew Cox, of No. 66 Park-street, (formerly Cross-street,) Five Points; by Sergeants POLLARD and JOURDAN.

On being brought before Justice BOGART, the women were each committed to the penitentiary for six months; and the men were severally held to bail, in $300, to answer at the Sessions the charge of keeping disorderly houses.

Passing Altered Bank Notes.

Yesterday morning a young man calling himself FREDERICK WILKINS, was brought before Justice DAVISON, at the Second District Police Court, upon a charge of passing altered Bank notes. JAMES PENNSBURY, doing business at No. 164 Prince-street, testified that defendant purchased 38 cents worth of meat from him and gave in payment a bill purporting to be a genuine "five" on the Deposit Bank of Delaware County, N. Y., which was altered from a one dollar note by means of pasting. Another charge was preferred against WILKINS by Mrs. HANNAH OTTEN, of No. 149 Prince-street, who accuses him of passing an altered bill on the Oriental Bank of this City, at her store, in payment for three shillings worth of cake. The prisoner was clearly identified by the two witnesses, and the Magistrate fully committed him for trial. The alterations of these bank notes are beautifully executed, and there is no doubt but many more of the bills have been passed off in various parts of the City. Hence all persons having taken any such issues, will further the ends of justice by calling upon Justice DAVISON.

Counterfeiters.

The two men arrested and charged with circulating and endeavoring to pass counterfeit $3 issues on the Mechanics Bank of Providence, R. I., were brought up yesterday morning before Judge OSBORNE, who put the usual interrogatories previous to their committal. Both are natives of Ireland, PHALEN, 35 years, and HAGAN 26 years of age, laborers. They write and cipher intelligent. Of the bills and their appearance they deny all knowledge. They were committed to the Tombs to await the proper course of justice.

The Lottery Dealers Bailed Out.

Yesterday morning the latesses of the lottery ticket venders were arraigned before Judge DAVISON, and held to bail in the sum of $500 each to answer at the Court of General Sessions. The following are the names of the prisoners, and those becoming bondsmen:

SEWARD C. HEAD, of No. 316 Chatham-street, was bailed by Simeon Ryan, keeper of Harry stable in Bedford-st.

JACOB SHIPSEY, of No. 448 Chatham-street, was also bailed by Simeon Ryan.

GEORGE A. THOMPSON and THOMAS RYAN, of No. 18 Crosby-st.

City Politics—Ninth Ward Whig Committee.

Last evening the Whig Committee of the Ninth Ward permanently organized for the present year. The following gentlemen were elected as officers: Chairman, W. A. WOOD; Secretary, G. B. FERTS; Treasurer, A. C. JEWELL.

Lecture on the Horse.

Hon. JAMES FRASER delivered a lecture on "That Noble Animal, the Horse," before the Mechanics' Institute, last evening, to a numerous audience. Mr. FRASER is a tamer of animals, and he said that during his life he had went over a thousand horses. He treated his subject in a manner worthy of his great experience.

A Son Stabbing his Father.

A reckless young man named CHAS. E. MAINE, was arrested and brought before Judge DAVISON yesterday, charged with stabbing his father in the arm, at their residence, No. 402 Broome-street. It appears the parent was reprimanding the defendant, when he seized a sheath knife and stuck it at him with good violence. The wound inflicted was quite serious, and the magistrate committed the prisoner in default of $500 bail.

Mayor's Black Book.

In connection with the Complaint Book it may be well to remind the public again that no anonymous communications are, or will be attended to. We are induced to make this observation from the number of such documents which have been sent to the Mayor lately, some of which contained charges of no light moment, and involved much responsibility in either recording or publishing them. In future the names of parties complaining will not be registered, or given to the press, persons, therefore, laboring under any grievance need not be deterred from seeking redress, through dread of publicity.

That the Hudson River Railroad Company encumber the street from Gansevoort to Twelfth-street with carts and freight, and oblige pedestrians to cross the street in passing along said neighborhood.

That gamblers congregate around the Methodist Church at Yorkville, using very obscene language while ladies and others are passing in and out of church.

That Mr. Shaw, keeper of a liquor store at the corner of Fourth-street and Sixth-avenue, admits persons by a side door, and sells them liquor, on the Sabbath.

That the sidewalk at No. 120½ East Broadway is in a bad condition—water settling under it, and making the walking very disagreeable.

That Thirty-eighth-street, between Second-avenue and East River, is in an impassable condition. This nuisance would be bad enough if the street had never been paved, but, under the circumstances, it is shameful. Dirt and filth have accumulated to a positively dangerous degree, leaving holes a foot deep in the middle of the road, and calls loudly for redress.

That gangs of boys congregate in Spring-street, between Hudson and Greenwich-streets, and insult ladies and others passing along. The above has become a great nuisance.

That rocks are thrown at the northwest corner of Twenty-eighth-street and Lexington-avenue, the same being in violation of the law, and very dangerous.

That spring-carts are in the habit of standing on the east side of the sidewalk at the southwest corner of Union-square, in Fourteenth-street.

That carts and wagons encumber the street opposite No. 204 West Fifteenth-street, and that the occupants of houses in the neighborhood throw ashes and garbage in the gutters and street.

That sidewalks in Clinton-street, between Elivington and Stanton-streets, are dangerous.

That rowdies congregate in Tenth-avenue and Twenty-sixth-street, and annoy the neighborhood.

That the sidewalk in front of Nos. 285 and 287 Twelfth-street, is not paved, and the neighbors empty their ashes there.

Iron Wood complains that boys are allowed by the police to gamble for pennies in the street, and that policemen take no remedy to prevent this species of immorality. These acts are particularly practiced on the sidewalks around St. Paul's Church.

A citizen complains of the imperfect street signs which are placed, on the corner of each street for the purpose of directing strangers and others, and recommends such as are adopted in Boston, being of cast iron and raised letters.

Geo. Thistleton complains that Charles Leighton, No. 18 Park-place, illegally detains his pension certificate, and unjustlyly refuses to accompany him to the Pension office to get it cashed.

Fire in William-street.

At 1½ o'clock yesterday morning a fire broke out in the basement of No. 107 William-street, occupied by JOHN ROTH, bootmaker. The first floor was occupied by GOLDER & MITCHELL, shade dealers, COHN & BROTHERS, cigar makers, and Mr. BAUMACH, dealer in artificial flowers. The fire was soon extinguished. The damage to the different occupants, chiefly by water, amounted to about $4,000.

Recovery of Stolen Property.

On Wednesday the Police officers attached to Justice DAVISON's Court recovered a large quantity of silks, satins, velvets and jewelry, which are supposed to have been stolen. The property is in the custody of Mr. MURRAY, the Clerk of the Court; and any person who has been robbed of such goods will further the ends of justice by calling at the Court to-day.

☞ DODWORTH gave his annual ball on Monday night, at Niblo's. There was a very large and brilliant attendance.

The Case of the Massachusetts.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT—March 8.

Before Judge Hall.

The United States vs. The steamboat Massachusetts.—The trial of this case was continued this morning. The claimants having closed their testimony, Mr. McKeon proposed to call Mr. Drew as a witness. This was objected to by the claimants, on the ground that he should have been called before the libelant's case was closed. Mr. McKeon being called on to state what he proposed to prove by Mr. Drew, said that he wished to show that the purchase money for the Massachusetts was not paid by Mr. Marsden nor by Mr. Ockenshit, but by the checks and notes of other parties in this City. Judge Hall said he did not think such testimony would be material, and declined to allow Mr. Drew to be examined.

The testimony on the first question, as to the right of the claimant to intervene, being therefore closed, Mr. McKeon inquired whether the Court would go on with the hearing of the merits of the case, and decide it altogether. Judge Hall said he could not, except by the express consent of the District Attorney, allow the case to go on, without deciding the present question. Mr. McKeon said he would rather have the decision of the Court upon this matter now.

The question was therefore submitted without argument, and the Court, without comment, decided that upon the evidence, sufficient was shown to entitle the claimant to intervene and defend the suit.

The trial of the case was now commenced upon the general merits—on the libel filed to forfeit the vessel for an alleged intention to violate the Neutrality Laws. It was agreed, on the part of the Government and the claimant, and recommended by the Court, that the parts of the testimony in the previous case, competent to be considered in the present, case should be admitted as proof.

Charles J. Cowdrey, called by the District Attorney, deposed that an oath attached to the manifest of the Massachusetts was prepared by him for Captain James W. Cook, at the office of the Custom-House; that Captain Cook took the oath before a Deputy Collector; but that he did not himself witness it; there was no clearance of the steamer; I have no record of its clearance; a copy of the oath produced was not made at the time he handed Capt. Cook the original draft; it was not made from any original in his office; so far as any official purpose connected with his office; he could not say who added him to make out the oath.

Cross-examined—The oath is in my hand writing; the original was attached to Capt. Cook's manifest; I recollect very distinctly that it was attached; there were several persons present, but I cannot tell the names of any.

RELATION OF PARENT AND SON—LIABILITY OF THE PARENT FOR THE SONS MORAL CONDUCT—ADOPTION—CRIMINABLE SECURITY OF CHRISTIAN MINSTRELSY.

Aaron Chichester vs. Edwin P. Christy.—This action is brought by the plaintiff, a clothing dealer in the Bowery, to recover $65, the amount of a quantity of clothing, purchased of him by Edward Byron Christy, otherwise called Harrington, a minor, who claims to be the son of the defendant, the well-known delineator of negro character, and the originator and manager of "Christy's Minstrels."

For the plaintiff it was shown by young Christy, the son, that he contracted the debt and charged his father to the defendant some time in June last; that the clothing which he purchased was necessary for him, and that he had on a previous occasion, purchased clothing of the plaintiff by the direction of the defendant, and had likewise charged it to his account. He also testified that the defendant had, until within the last few years, lived with his mother, who frequently and now went by the name of Mrs. Harrington, at Buffalo; that he had always regarded him as his father, and had been supported by him until the latter part of last May.

After leaving Buffalo the defendant had resided in this City, cohabiting with another woman, whom he called his wife, and the witness had also lived here with his mother, though in a different part of this City. He had never lived with the defendant after his departure from Buffalo, but had been in the habit of calling at his house in Grand-street, from time to time, and received from him money to pay his board and other expenses. In May last he had a final interview with the defendant there, who said him he was now old enough to support himself, and finally ordered him to leave the house and never return to it, or as the witness expressed it, "discarded him."

As evidence of the relationship existing between the defendant and this boy, several letters were read, written by the former to the latter, in which he several times addressed the latter as his son. Bills were also exhibited, with the name of Edward Byron Christy, in the defendant's handwriting, on the fly-leaf. It was also shown, by several witnesses, that the defendant and the mother of young Christy had for many years lived openly together in Buffalo; that the door-plate bore the name of Christy, and one witness even testified that the defendant was in the habit of calling her Mrs. Christy. He had also supported her in New-York within a year or eighteen months.

Here the plaintiff rested, and the counsel for the defendant moved for a non-suit, on the ground that no legitimate connection between the defendant and the boy's mother having been proved, the defendant was only liable for his support as long as he continued to recognise and adopt him as his son; but having distinctly renounced this adoption in May last, his liability for the boy's expenses ceased after that period. The Court, however, decided that the relationship and the question of the renunciation or continuance of the adoption were facts to go to the Jury.

For the defendant it was then shown, by various witnesses, that one Harrington, the reputed husband of the boy's mother, had resided in Buffalo for years; and George Harrington, professionally known as George Christy, testified that he was himself the son of said Harrington, and that he had seen him within eight or ten years in Rochester. Several of the witnesses, who had been members of the defendant's company of "Minstrels," and had resided with him in Buffalo while he lived with this woman, testified that he had invariably called her Mrs. Harrington, and never his wife.

It was also shown that the boy, Byron, had received from the defendant $50 in money in April last, on his return from a voyage round the world, and on the occasion of their last interview; and it was contended that these sums were sufficient to provide him with necessary clothing, and that his subsequent purchases of the plaintiff was unnecessary.

Judge Barnard in charging the Jury, remarked that this action was founded on the allegation that the boy Byron was the son of the defendant, and authorized, under the circumstances in which he was placed, to contract a debt.

The parent of a child, who lives in his family, cannot be charged by any person for articles of any description furnished to the child, without the consent of the father. Nor can a wife make her husband responsible for debts contracted by her, unauthorized by him, notwithstanding the implied authority which the law gives her. If then this boy was the lawful son of the defendant, and had been in the habit of purchasing goods of the plaintiff with the father's consent, the latter would be held responsible, unless he could show that he had given notice that he would be no longer liable for such debts. For the parent is his own judge of what is proper for his own family, and no person has the right to judge for him.

If he casts his children out upon the world, they are entitled to a credit for such articles as are necessary for their support; and in the present case, if the defendant had ever recognized this boy as his son, and had then discarded him from his home, telling him never to return again, the latter would still have the right to contract debts for articles necessary for his support, in his condition and position in life, and the father would be liable for them. The Jury were to look at the facts of the case, and determine whether the articles purchased by the boy were necessary to him at the time they were purchased.

As to the question of the legitimacy of the boy Byron, he observed that if the defendant had called him his son, openly and in presence of friends, the driving of him away would not probably amount to a practical rescission of the adoption, even had he been unlawfully begotten. The defendant had called the boy not to return to his house, but he had not told him he would not provide for him, and the Jury must determine what this amounted to as an absolute renunciation of adoption or not.

They were not authorized to hold the defendant liable for this debt, merely because on a former occasion he had sent the boy to the plaintiff's establishment to procure clothing. If the boy had gone there frequently with the defendant's assent, then the latter might be held responsible; but the previous occasion was to be regarded as an isolated transaction only, and could not be considered satisfactory evidence that the defendant had given his consent for the subsequent purchases.

But was the boy the lawful son of the defendant? There was evidence to the effect that his mother had once borne the name of Harrington, and that a man of that name, alleged to be her husband, was living within a few years; but there was no positive evidence that he was her husband, or if so, that she had ever been divorced from him. Now, if no such person as Harrington had existed, they might be justified in supposing that this boy, Byron, had been legitimately begotten; for if a man lives openly with a woman for a number of years, as the defendant and the mother of the boy had done, the law implies, from his own acts, that he is her husband; they live together as man and wife, and owing to the peculiar and irregular way in which the marriage ceremony is frequently celebrated in this country, the frequent difficulty of proving that marriage ever took place, the presumption would be that they have been legally married.

The jury were to determine, then, what was the character of the female connection of this woman with Harrington. If they were satisfied that she was his wife, then the boy Byron is an illegitimate child, because it has been distinctly shown that Harrington was alive within a very few years, and no divorce has been proved. If, on the other hand, they believe that the connection of Mrs. Harrington had been of a different character, then the presumption would rather be from the fact that she lived for a number of years with the defendant, that they were man and wife, and that the child is legitimate.

If this boy was not the legitimate son of the defendant, the latter was not bound to acknowledge him or to support him, except so far as the statute required him to provide that such offspring should not become a public charge. If, however, he acknowledged him as his son down to the 23d of last May, then he was liable for his support in all suitable and necessary articles even after that period. The jury found a verdict for the defendant.

For the plaintiff, Messrs. Banks and Glover; for the defendant, Messrs. Clark and Reid.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS—March 8.

Business was tolerably brisk in this Court yesterday. It has been no fault of the authorities that the work was not brisk before. All that the District Attorney and the Court could do, was done; but it was not till yesterday that a case could be tried. The first case was one of

GRAND LARCENY.

Joseph Sinclair was tried for stealing two watches from the store of Joseph Gagnevil, doing business at No. 41 Nassau-street. Mr. Gagnevil stated that the prisoner came to his store on January 12th, dressed in shabby apparel, and wished to select watches to the amount of $450, to be shown to a Mr. Davis, who desired to purchase them. Witness showed the watches, but would not allow Sinclair to remove them. Whereupon the prisoner said he would call for them in the afternoon, and desired the bill to be made out against his arrival. About two hours after he had disappeared, the loss of two watches was discovered, and suspicion rested upon him. The prisoner's counsel argued that the watches were passed to his friend Mr. C. Spencer underhook (hair-stigator). The Jury, after the Recorder had charged, and the Jury, when brief deliberation, returned a verdict of

SECONDARY IN THE GRAND LARCENY.

Francis McCloskey, a youth of 18 or 19 years, jointly indicted with Sinclair, was tried for feloniously entering the jewelry shop of Owen Meehan, No. 310 Avenue C on the night of Jan. 27, and stealing therefrom a quantity of watches, rings, &c. The prisoner, who was defended by Mr. Blankman, who appeared for the defence, tried to establish a plea of alibi, but did not succeed. Verdict, Guilty. The prisoner will be sentenced with Sinclair on Friday.

Louis Brunner, a German, was tried on a charge of burglary in stealing the clothing belonging to Mathew Gaffney, on the night of Jan. 27, from the premises in Edward E. Bailey, south side, another door to Avenue C. It appeared that on the morning of Feb. 3, he was the prisoner came to the house with a key, which he said he had found in the street, and gave it to the watchman, through the side light, and saw him take two coats from the premises. The watchman, however, had not arrested him and gave him into the custody of a police officer, who found the same in the possession of a second party, charged with the crime of a burglary. The Jury found the prisoner Guilty. He was sentenced to ten years and two months in the State Prison. The Court then adjourned.

Miss Bunkley's Escape from the St. Joseph's Nunnery—Her Anticipated Disclosures—Threatened with Anonymous Lectures.

From the Frederick (Md.) Examiner.

CRESAGERSTOWN, Feb. 24, 1855.

From what is said and being done by the Roman Catholics in relation to Miss BUNKLEY's flight from St. Joseph's, they fear a disclosure of facts. After Miss BUNKLEY had been in our village some four or three days, the Superior sent her overseer to Cresagerstown to ascertain whether such a young lady had been seen or heard of, where she was, &c.

Learning where Miss BUNKLEY was, and having been instructed by a Jesuit, he approached her and urged her to return to St. Joseph's, but all was in vain, for, said Miss BUNKLEY to me, "I would sooner suffer death than return to St. Joseph's." He then prevailed on her to be quiet, to say nothing about the institution, for fear of injuring it. But this is not all. Two of the managing sisters came to Cresagerstown to see Miss BUNKLEY, and although they were not permitted to see her, yet they addressed several notes to her, urging her to be silent, to say nothing about St. Joseph's, for fear of injuring the institution, to return with them, and they would send her home to her father.

Finding all their plans availed nothing, what do they say? They cry out, insane, insane! and had they been aware her mind was so much impaired, she would have been sent to the hospital, Mount Hope, near Baltimore. But this time a current report is in circulation that Miss BUNKLEY was a Protestant, sent to St. Joseph's as a spy, to make observations, and thus disgrace the Institution.

Like Priest O'DONNELL, they would say, all that is said out of the Institution by a young lady novice or nun, or even by a Protestant, "is radically false."

Thinking, perhaps, Miss BUNKLEY is writing an exposé of Romanism and the horrid abominations practiced in St. Joseph's, they would come with their threats, thinking to frighten the young lady.

The following letter was mailed in the city of Baltimore, postmarked January 28, 1855, and sent to Miss BUNKLEY, in the city of Norfolk, Va.:

"Miss BUNKLEY: It is announced in the Frederick Examiner, and copied in the Baltimore papers of this morning, that you are engaged in writing a work for publication, regarding your disgraceful conduct at St. Joseph's, Emmitsburg. As it appears to be your intention to gain a little notoriety, your situation is anything but an enviable one.

"The notorious MARIA MONK, who published a few years since, awful disclosures, and who, backed by a host of vile vagabond Protestants, (who are now, we learn, engaged in the same dirty work with you at Norfolk,) was confined in the New-York prison, where she had been confined as a common vagabond, thief and open prostitute. Think, Miss Bunkley, how you have humbugged so often by such lying tales, will not your again encourage any similar work. Do you understand that? And you may inform the Protestant preachers who are now gulling you, that all their efforts will be in vain.

"Come, now, no lies—give us the truth, and give us the names and residences of the editors all over the Union, that have made offers augmented for a recital of your life—she! You are caught in your own trap—ah! Oh, shame! shame!! shame!!—when your work appears I will give you and your fellow co-laborers such a lashing through the public press as will make you shed almost tears of blood—ah! Scoundrels! I know you; so look out—publish the work now if you dare. Send this to the editor of that vile sheet, the Frederick Examiner. Your very obt servant."

We have every reason to believe that the above letter was written by a certain Roman Catholic priest in the city of Baltimore. His whole aim is to heap ruin, infamy and disgrace upon the unfortunate character of an innocent young lady, who is well known and beloved by all her friends.

Yes, he appears like the midnight assassin with his bloody dagger concealed.

This is the spirit of Jesuitism manifested boldly and so impudently in our happy America, by a foreign priest who surrenders implicit obedience to the Captain General of that order.

Because Miss BUNKLEY was badly treated at St. Joseph's, and fled from the horrid prison in the manner she did, then called on Protestants for protection, this writer would call it a disgraceful conduct.

When he refers Miss B. to MARIA MONK, who made an escape from an old convent in Montreal, and who made "awful disclosures" of Romanism, that she was "backed by a host of vile, vagabond Protestant ministers." Now, says he, these kind of men are engaged in the same dirty work with you at Norfolk. Then he endeavors to ruin the character of a young lady who never harmed him. Then he adds: "The public having been humbugged so often by such lying tales;" as much as to say, anything Miss BUNKLEY may write and publish will be "lying tales." Surely he cannot believe what he has uttered. But he fancies to himself all the efforts of Miss B., and those made by Protestant ministers, "will be in vain." Then why does he manifest so much uneasiness?

Last of all, he threatened to lash Miss B. and her "fellow co-laborers through the public press as will make her shed almost tears of blood." We respectfully ask the gentleman not to forget to give his name in the public when he undertakes that task. But, Mr. Editor, this writer does not forget to give you a passing notice, where he speaks of "that vile sheet, the Frederick Examiner." As I know you will do the gentleman ample justice, we will dismiss the subject for the present.

GEO. W. ANDERSON.

Threats, denunciations and proscription have been practiced in vain, to divert us from what we most sincerely hold to be our line of duty. The reader, who has carefully watched the reconstruction of political parties and the issues which have brought them about, must also have noticed the unconcealed effort to muzzle the American press, and seen with rejoicing the many instances in which journals have had the independence to assert their freedom and resist the tremendous influences brought to bear upon them.

Indeed, we sometimes think the heedless presumption of our former Roman Catholic friends was a necessary spur, without which the press was in danger of slumbering into apathy—the first step towards decadence and corruption. But now it is aroused, and nerving itself to the task, has gathered facts, and spread abroad information that has greatly alarmed an indignant people, and summoned all their energies to forehand the blows and plots of a terrible secret and ruthless enemy—Popery.

We would say to writers of anonymous letters, and their sympathizers, that their hatred and abuse pester us not; we expect no better things from them; and, finding in the approbation of those whose good opinions we value the highest encouragement, shall continue in the fulfillment of our assumed duty, regardless of the shafts of envy, hatred, malice and detraction.

Com. Vanderbilt and Congress.

"Commodore" VANDERBILT has returned from Washington in rather unfortunate spirits. Possessing a large capital, upon which he is willing to draw freely to accomplish his ends, and endowed with a more than ordinary share of energy and perseverance, he is accustomed to succeed. Under these circumstances he naturally is inclined to defeat with a very bad grace. Used to imitates the wondrous magnate who sits in the White House, in condemning the stupidity of Congress, because it could not be made to believe in the policy or propriety of violating its faith in order to enable the said "Commodore" to carry to a successful issue his personal quarrel with the Collins Steamship Company. Judging from his past history, we shall expect soon to see the "Commodore" setting up an "opposition" Congress, at half price, and taking the legislation of the country on contract at so much per quire of foolscap.

The "Commodore" is out in the papers with a long letter on "subsidies to ocean steamers," in defence of the Executive Veto of the Steamer Appropriation bill. In the course of this document, he first disclaims ill will towards the Collins Line or any of the gentlemen interested in it, and then proceeds with a series of insidious imputations upon their and their management of their business, such as from any one who did not profess friendship, would look very much like the emanation of bitter hate, without the courage to give itself open, above-board expression. This seeming inconsistency, perhaps, may be attributed, not to ill-will towards Mr. COLLINS, but to a sort of general dissatisfaction with "all the world and the rest of mankind."

There is one important point in the history of this unsuccessful enterprise of Mr. VANDERBILT's, which his very long letter fails to develop. It was openly charged upon the floor of Congress, by the Chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads, that Mr. VANDERBILT, before putting in any bid to carry the mails to Liverpool, called upon Mr. COLLINS, told him that he thought of competing with him before Congress, but that he would refrain from doing so if he (Mr. COLLINS) would put back two of his ships to the Albion Works for repair, and purchase the steamer Ariel, then on the stocks, for some time. Mr. COLLINS declined, considering the Ariel worth not over $150,000, and that the additional $100,000 was asked simply as "hush money," and that then Mr. VANDERBILT declared his purpose of putting in his competing bid, and went to Washington and commenced his disastrous fight. It was natural that gentlemen at Washington should look upon this transaction, unexplained, with a rather unfavorable eye. It savored very much of what would be called a black mail operation between other parties,—hence, probably, the very small vote in the Senate for the VANDERBILT proposition, immediately after the veto of the Steamer bill.

This little occurrence has never been denied by Mr. VANDERBILT, that we have heard. Perhaps it can be explained. We do not suppose it will be denied. Indeed, Mr. VANDERBILT is understood to have mentioned it to at least two other gentlemen, with an expression of surprise that Mr. COLLINS did not send down at once in favorable response to so unreasonable a demand. The fact is, the "Commodore" has become so accustomed to bringing down his game, that it is not to be wondered at if he does expect it to fall the instant he points his gun. But others, of less experience, sagacity and enterprise, can hardly enter into the spirit of this sort of proceeding, and be satisfied of its morality. And even if they were satisfied on that point, $100,000 is a good deal of money to most people, and looks at least a cipher too high on the price of Mr. VANDERBILT's leniency. As the "Commodore" likes newspaper notoriety, he will perhaps be glad of the opportunity to explain.

One point more. The "Commodore" seems to feel the necessity of apologizing for his apparent hostility to the Collins Line, and labors hard to show that his real purpose was not to injure that line, but to establish an additional one to compete with the Cunarders. Of course we would not doubt Mr. VANDERBILT's word on this subject; but if he really is friendly to the Collins Line, there is again great need of an explanation on his part, to show what was the consideration, then, for which Mr. COLLINS was to bind himself to put an amount of work in the hands of a particular firm, and to pay an exorbitant sum for a ship on the stocks, as the price of the abandonment of his rival scheme!

☞ The pugilistic affray, which recently occurred at STANWIX Hall, has found its natural result in the loss of life. WILLIAM POOLE died yesterday at his residence in Christopher-street, in consequence of his wounds, after eleven days of intense suffering. POOLE has been noted as a leader among the "fancy men." He has been cut off in the prime of life. The attack upon him, however it may have been provoked by previous conduct, does not appear to have been indeed by any direct overt act on his part; and, hence the fierce onslaught that was made can scarcely be considered in any other light than that of a premeditated and deliberate attempt at murder. The investigation of the case is very interesting. We publish it in full.

A Word to Men in Big Paddy.

The delightful weather we have enjoyed for a week past ought to have tempted the most delicate of our feeble folk out on walks of pleasure or business. The streets have been in good condition for pedestrians, though bad enough for carriages; the sidewalks free and dry, and the crossings, except near the rivers, commendably clean. Each night the air has been balmy, and only comfortably cool; and the mean is just such as lovers best appreciate in rural retreats. The sun, meanwhile, is not oppressive for heat, nor is there any frost in the wind. Indeed, the weather has been of that delightful temperature, that we stop and consult our pocket diaries to learn what month it is, if we would date a letter, and what season is instant.

It is a great pity, with such big, fat feet as our ladies possess, (we beg their pardon,—it is only of theirs as compared with the Chinese ladies' we speak,) that our sisters, wives, and female cousins should be such miserable walkers. It is sad to see the sons of such sires as ours were, out of breath on walking a mile; waiting fifteen minutes at a corner for a horse-car, and the privilege of standing in it while it creeps up a steep grade from necessity, and down the hill from fear—a distance that a smart lad can compass on foot while they are waiting. A City car or an omnibus is a great convenience in a stormy day, though wise people do not go far out of their way to take it in a storm, knowing that it is quite sure to be full. But in such joyous Spring weather as this, one who prefers riding in a close carriage of any sort to walking, may well ponder whether he has not a constitution so weak, and a physical frame so feeble, that, like consumptives and the insane, he has no right to live otherwise always than as a bachelor, or to risk bequeathing his weakness to a descendant.

Just now that everybody is looking around for a residence for the next year's occupancy we would suggest that a mile or two from the place of business ought not to be objected to, nor should the bill for rides about town be a large one on any account. He who cares anything for his health should deem the time well spent which is devoted to the exercise of a brisk walk. Low fares on the railroads are, after all, we fear, a curse to our people, and if, as has been proposed, they should be reduced still farther, from five to three cents, we doubt not the necessity of new lines through all the little cross streets would be created soon. Strange that we do not see in our pale WALLS fixed upon the signs of our growing impotence, and in our delicate, bloodless women tokens that the race degenerates. The Eastern war is developing to the world the wretched inefficiency that characterizes the aristocracy of Britain, yet in the matter of physical education will it be denied that British lords and ladies are far better trained than our self-made aristocrats?—self-made, we mean, as distinguished from those that generous Nature had a hand in manufacturing. The English "upper class" prides itself even yet on its rational out-door amusements, its athletic and manly sports. Its ladies feel it no disgrace to take long walks, and hold it not uncomely to be at home in the saddle. Our "upper class" has long aped all its weaknesses and omitted its most creditable features. Not only so—or, it would be tolerable. But the less pretending circles are infected, too. Almost every retired merchant who has a family of girls finds one among them who boasts herself of her delicate health,—who enjoys a hysteric fit at every unusual noise and is never safe with a closed door between her and the bottle of invigorating salts. If the father is worth a hundred thousand, the daughter too often feels called upon to be a perpetual invalid, except on ball nights, and when the first fashions of dry goods are exposed by the tradesmen. Five hundred thousand justifies the most robust of all the girls in terrible swooning fits, even in public, and utter helplessness about the ankles.

It ought to be preached in all quarters, and loudly, that physical weakness is a sure precursor of mental imbecility. Feeble men flash out very respectable fancies sometimes; but they are not trusty, nor of much service, except through seconds. Sound minds need sound bodies to operate in and through. Americans who have feet ought to use them. For their childrens' sake if not for their own, they should walk more, work more, live more in the open air. They should encourage healthful plays in their children, and teach them that it is no sin to play tag, romp, and run "like mad" in the streets, when school is out and work is done. Otherwise our full-length statues will seem collossal in the eyes of the puny people that will call themselves by our names a couple of centuries hence, and prate of the old-time virtues as if they had inherited them.

Materials for American Literature.

Using the word Literature in its broadest sense, it must be apparent to every one that a magnificent field for intellect, in all its abstract and artistic shapes, is opening before us. The past has been gathering materials for our hands. Amid the stir and bustle of a new world, the landscape changing from natural luxuriance to cultivated beauty, the forest disappearing from its original scene to reappear in the crowded harbors and thronged city, there has been a steady accumulation of all that can be needed to stimulate thought and quicken fancy. The most significant fact in this connection is, that the historic incidents of our national life are most closely related to the essential nature and social progress of man. No other aspect of civilization has presented so completely and so instructively the subordinateness of circumstances to the true idea of manhood, nor brought out so fully its vital relations to the divine law of Christianity. For two centuries this illustration has been unfolding its import. Starting, not from conventionalities, but from great and genuine principles, we have been working out results, that few saw clearly because human nature has hitherto been the creature of other agencies than its own intuitive will. Our individual and national mind had to be educated into an adjustment to this new condition of humanity. In part only, were we ready for it. A good deal had to be suffered and time had to elapse before we could appreciate our strange position. Is it then at all surprising, that our Literature has not yet represented our character and deeds? And ought we to regret, that nationally we have done so little in this useful and attractive department of intellect? Viewed in a proper light, the want of a distinct and original Literature—such an one as would adequately express our own peculiarities—ought to be regarded as a matter for congratulation. The vast meaning of our "mission" has been but slowly apprehended; and hence it is fortunate that Literature has not undertaken to decypher it.

If, therefore, our National Institutions are to have any direct influence in shaping American Literature, it augurs well for its future interests, that it has not been prematurely developed. For it must be obvious that a thorough emancipation of our intellect from all false associations, hereditary errors and seductive conventionalities, at least so far as they might interrupt the natural and healthy action of our own genuine local sentiments, was absolutely necessary as a preparation for such a work. The simple difficulty hitherto has been, that we have not had a distinct and definite American mind. But time is bringing about a vast change. The country is individualizing itself more and more. Its progress and power are deepening the contrasts between itself and Europe. Our intellect is assuming its own sphere. Our wants are stimulating taste. And hence we shall soon be prepared to make as bread a mark on the literature of the day as we have already made on its political science. Our Politics were not a rapid growth. They date back to MILTON, HARRINGTON, SIDNEY. A great number of events, a host of heroic actors, a continuous current of circumstances, were all requisite to mature our republican system. The same law has governed our Literature; the same lapse of time has been needed to inspire and direct our mind; and consequently, our books now begin to embody an American spirit, that is as characteristic as our institutions. Whenever a people have the materials for romance, history, criticism and philosophy, they will be sure to have writers of genius to put them into permanent and attractive forms. We have reached this point. We have attained to that stage of experience, in which nations have ideas, sentiments and hopes of their own. Everything desirable in the creations of genius will follow; and the world will not have to wait long, before the productions of American mind will take in general literature, a place of equal importance with the political science of our country.

Government of "Shams."

It is not often that men can see a palpable case of historic justice. The punishments to nations are terrible and sure, but they are not always clear to the common mind. The philosopher can trace them, and can give to the learned world the connection between the causes long working and the fearful results; but such reasoning makes little impression on the masses of men.

Before the French Revolution, there were political prophets of that event; and since, there have been philosophical historians to explain it;—but still, how few in any country fully admit that corruption in rulers and a dead routine of official management must, inevitably, as a law of nature, bring after them their crop of terrible evils.

For a long time now in England, men whom the world sneered at or ignored, like CARLYLE and others, have been warning the people of the gulf yawning before the Government; of the inevitably fatal tendencies of their "red-tape," lifeless, aristocratic system. The idea which those prophets have thundered now for years in the ears of the British people, is, that they are sacrificing reality to routine, that they are letting vanish from every function of Government life, and are substituting old formulæ and red-tape regulations, and that if they keep on in this course, swift ruin is certain to come.

It would seem almost as if Providence could not, in a more conspicuous manner, have shown to the world at once these sins and their condign punishment. A year ago—within a few days—England sent out her splendid expedition against Russia. In the Autumn, but little weakened by disease, the army was landed 'in the most fortunate and skillful manner in the Crimea. The Anglo-Saxon pluck carried against formidable odds the various positions of the Russian forces, and the besieging army, quickened by victory, was encamped against Sebastopol. Everything was favorable. A great fleet in their rear, connecting with the sources of supply in every country; a communication of only seven miles with the sea, not liable to be attacked; a healthy latitude, and, though Winter approaching, yet a Winter not remarkable for length or severity.

The British army were, as it were, placed on a little promontory before Europe, to show what English spirit and English organization were. To make the spectacle still clearer, another army, under precisely the same natural conditions, lay side by side with them. If the French perished, and the English succeeded, no one could, as is naturally done in most of such instances, lay the blame to the elements, or to causes beyond the reach of Governments. The similar exposure of both made the question an easier one to determine.

The sad result—gloomy even here in a distant land, where we do not know the sufferers, but how much more gloomy in England—we all behold a gallant army wasting, as one of their writers expresses it, "like the snow from the hills around Balaklava;" men half-starved, ill-clad, exposed to Winter storms, without shoes, without stores, losing health, losing order and discipline; sick men taken off each day by the ship-load, and here again in ill-ventilated quarters and under insufficient care, dying in such numbers that there are not means to bury them. All this while, within seven miles of this dying and starving multitude, as a tantalus fruit, are cargoes of food, warehouses full of clothing and comforts, chests of money, and the arm of a navy which could be stretched if necessary to the most distant climes to draw food for those brave and devoted men. And what is the spell which has bound up all the resources of a mighty nation in this the extreme emergency?

It is the spirit of routine—of lifeless official habit—of aristocratic decorousness and inefficiency. Before the loaves of bread can reach the hungry soldier, an order must go here, must be countersigned there, must be carried thither and brought back hither. Each responsible place is filled with a spectrum of a man—a scare-man, instead of a reality. He has no wits—no originality—no ambition honorable—he only knows all the red-tape ways—is a polite gentleman, and is connected with the aristocracy. "Sham" seems to have been penetrating through all ranks of the Army. The General is only a starred and nobly descended stuffed figure—his staff, with more flippancy, are equally hollow—his quarter-masters, his commissariat, and even his sergeants, are all in their places, not because they know how to fill them, but because they have satisfied certain arbitrary conditions of routine. All this might do very well in peace, but War will have nothing of shams—stuffed figures are soon torn to pieces in such meetings of the elements. Lord RAGLAN and the English Army find themselves in inextricable confusion and difficulty. One department so entangles with another, or is impeded by another—there is such an incredible stupidity and wrong-headedness—such corruption, and laziness, and indifference—such worship of the awful idea of official order, that in the chaos occasioned, the troops seem about to starve or die, for want of comforts which a two hours' walk could give to any of them.

Was there ever such an instance of gigantic stupidity in human history?

A noble army losing strong men at the rate of a hundred a day, merely for want of the necessities of life, while in the harbor near them, ships are carrying back unopened cargoes of grain, because some petty official formality has not been complied with, and others are leaving heaps of garments and of clothing to rot in the weather, because there is no proper officer to receive them.

Oh, for some tyrant—we almost exclaim—some real man, even with a selfish and indomitable will—some CROMWELL, or NAPOLEON, or JACKSON, who could put an iron hand in and burst these red-tape bands, and hang rascally commissariat officers, and break any and every regulation of Downing-street for the sake of saving his army. Still, sad as it is, it is just. So perish all shams, lifeless formalities, Aristocracy the world over henceforth! England has taken to herself an unjust and false system—gilded however it be, and it has cost her her life-blood. We pity the brave men who dot the hill sides with graves at Balaklava, and who sleep under the cypresses of Scutari; we sigh to think of the years of sorrow and tears which have begun now in so many a hearth-home of England. But it is right. The people have chosen to be governed, not by merit, nor talent, nor courage—but by badges, by race, by shams of whatever name—and now God's laws are bringing the inevitable retribution.

So always shall it be everywhere, whether we see it or no. The laws of justice in history are never to be eluded. So shall it be in America likewise, with our corruption and our injustice, if we do not turn in time. Party men in Presidents' chairs, corruption of office-holders; bargains in Congress in place of honest business; injustice to the negro, will in the end, when the time of trial and danger comes, bring their stern and unescapable retribution, even as similar curses are doing now among the brave men before Sebastopol.

Academy of Music.

From the magnificent proportions of an operatic failure of the first class, the difficulty at the Academy has subsided into an interesting squabble. A profound and impressive silence is preserved by all the belligerents. Mr. MARETZEK's "facts," and Mr. OLE BULL's "plot," are alike in abeyance.

It is better, perhaps, that the matter rest where it is. After all, it is doubtful if the public cares a single rush whether one or the other is in the right, or both in the wrong. There was little interest shown in the Academy whilst it was in the hands of OLE BULL & Co., and less regret, we suspect, that it is now out of their hands. It was a mere speculation, conducted feebly from the beginning, and without a proper claim on the artistic community. It died from inanition—as all such things must—but died with a kick, which made it interesting.

The Academy will reopen shortly under the auspices of Mr. JAMES PHALAN. If capital, enterprise and conscientiousness are employed in its management, there can be little doubt of success. One thing the shareholders should learn from this emeute—that the ultimate prospects of the Academy are not improved by leasing it to speculators whose very existence depends on the success or failure of a week's performances.

An entertainment will shortly be given for the benefit of the poorer artistes of the late Company. Signors BRIGNOLI, (the new tenor,) BARILLI, BARTUCCI, &c., have signified their intention of singing gratuitously on the occasion. It is to take place, we believe, on Monday next.

The editor of the Courrier des Etats Unis has favored us with an advance copy of a letter which appears in his journal of to-day. It is in reply to Mr. MARETZEK's. The writer properly admits all Mr. MARETZEK's claims as a humorist, but maintains that he sometimes overstops the bounds of fancy and fact. As an instance he refers to the final paragraph of Mr. MARETZEK's letter—that the most ruinous engagement at the Academy was the one entered into through the special intermeddle of the Courier's fashionable. The editor gives three reasons why this is not true, any one of which will suffice: we take the first—because it is false. We would gladly, for the communication, feel as it involves unnecessarily the name of a lady artiste, in connection with a purely private matter, we cannot perceive the necessity for doing so. Similar reasons would certainly have excluded Mr. MARETZEK's.

Buckleys' Burlesque Opera—The "Two Pompeys."

A new Negro Farce has been produced nightly by the BUCKLEYS, during the week, with excellent success. It is replete with genuine darkey wit; and in addition, the author has introduced some gems from different operas, which are appropriate to the plot—among which is the challenge duet from "Le Chalet." Miss EMMANUEL, PERCIVAL and BIMBO BUCKLEY, appear to excellent advantage. The piece will be continued several evenings.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Closing Scenes in Congress.

Special Correspondence of the N. Y. Daily Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, March 6, 1855.

The waves of excitement which rolled over the closing hours of Congress have receded, and Washington has become again a sober "village." A few days more will scatter the few strangers who still linger about the hotel lobbies,—and the metropolis will settle down into its gloomiest, dullest and most unsatisfactory mood.

In looking over the last few days of the Session, and their proceedings, some few facts occur to my mind as worthy of passing observation. Prominent among these stands the defeat of the Pacific Railroad in the House, after Senator GWIN, of California, had carried it triumphantly through the Senate. I cannot avoid the conviction that this result is to be justly attributed to the treachery of professed friends of the measure. As will be remembered, I have frequently stated that the Pacific Railroad could never pass under the leadership of Gen. MCDOUGAL, of California, because of the hostility he needlessly excited against himself at the Nebraska Session, by postponing the consideration of the Pacific Railroad bill, in order that the Nebraska bill might be got before the House out of its regular order. This prediction has been fully verified by the disgraceful defeat of the measure when he moved it, although it is well known that a large majority of the House was in favor of such a measure.

Mr. MCDOUGAL, after this signal discomfiture, became satisfied of the necessity of taking advice from practical men as to the mode of securing the success of a Railroad bill. Accordingly, about two weeks ago, a consultation was held at the house of a distinguished Senator, in this city, among some twenty gentlemen of different sections and diverse political sentiments, but all in favor of any measure by Congress likely to secure a railroad to the Pacific. Mr. MCDOUGAL was present at this consultation, and assented to its action with seeming cordiality. It was arranged that he should retire from the leadership in favor of Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, an Anti-Nebraska Whig of the true stamp. Mr. DISNEY, of Ohio,—who, as Chairman of the Committee of Public Lands, was entitled to the floor for several days in succession during the morning hour,—was to yield place to another Western member, in order that the latter might report some one of the Railroad Land Grant bills then pending, and ask its immediate consideration. This Land bill before the House, Mr. CAMPBELL was to move the Senate's Pacific Railroad bill as an amendment, and under his auspices it would have passed by probably twenty majority.

It was necessary to move the Pacific Railroad bill as an amendment to another bill, because the former could be got up, directly, only by a two-thirds vote. The programme thus arranged was rehearsed each successive night by the principal parties engaged in the scheme, but from the hour the arrangement was made, Mr. MCDOUGAL's zeal cooed out at his finger ends, and he exhibited an unaccountable indifference in regard to its success, while Mr. DISNEY, some how or other, never could see the opportunity to lead off according to pre-arrangement, although everybody else who was in the secret wondered day after day that he did not seize upon the many excellent opportunities which flitted by. I have no hesitation in saying that a reasonable amount of sincere, earnest effort on the part of Messrs. MCDOUGAL and DISNEY, simply to get the subject before the House, would certainly have led to the enactment of the long desired law. But Dr. GWIN, the father of the successful bill in the Senate, is a candidate for reelection to that body; and Mr. MCDOUGAL is one of his competitors for the place. Had the bill passed both Houses it would have placed GWIN's election beyond contingency, and MCDOUGAL's chances much farther below par than they now are. Do these facts throw any light on the secret of the inaction at the critical moment, of MCDOUGAL and of his associate on the Public Lands Committee—DISNEY?

The Philadelphia Mint is destined to dry up, that's clear. Mr. WALKER, of New-York, is entitled to much credit for his earnest and effectual efforts to procure the insertion, in the Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, of an amendment, directing that hereafter all the refining of precious metal shall be done at the New-York Assay Office. At his request, too, Gov. SEWARD passed the amendment through the Senate so quietly, that the Pennsylvania Senators never knew anything of the matter until it was all over, much to their chagrin. The operation of this amendment will be found so salutary, that the next Congress will be quite likely to close altogether the Mint at Philadelphia, and establish it in this City.

Senator MASON's opposition in Executive Session, to the confirmation of MONTGOMERY BLAIR to be United States Solicitor for the New Court of Claims, is subject of not a little comment. No one questions the eminent fitness of that gentleman for the place, on the score both of ability as a lawyer, and integrity as a man. If the Judges but equal him in these high qualities, the President will have at least one act of his Administration upon which he may look back from future years with proud satisfaction. As an honest man, Mr. BLAIR has expressed his sentiments freely upon the Slavery question; and if he had not, no matter; he comes from a liberty-loving stock,—and that was made the basis of Mr. MASON's assault in secret session, where the victim of envy, malice, or hate, has no possible opportunity for self-vindication or defence. It is not believed, however, that his Anti-Slavery views constituted his real offence in the Senator's eyes; and it is charged that this real offence is nothing more nor less than his being the son of FRANCIS P. BLAIR, who, during JACKSON's time, had occasion to cause Mr. MASON most unmercifully, in the Administrative organ, for getting off the party track. It is hard to be compelled to believe that an educated and titled gentleman, in this enlightened age, can carry his private griefs behind the closed doors of the Senate hall, and attempt to visit his malice upon the second generation: yet I fear it is true.

One of the most pleasant episodes in the House during Sunday morning last, was the public reconciliation between Gen. LANE of Oregon and Mr. FARLEY of Maine, who, it will be remembered, had a personal rencontre on the floor a few weeks ago, provoked by the intolerance and insults of the former, who was the aggressor. Gen. LANE freely acknowledged his fault on Sunday, and expressed the hope that it would be forgotten. Mr. FARLEY promptly and appropriately responded to his friendly advances, and the difference was healed. It is to be regretted that Mr. F. does not return to Congress. Having his recent term he has won the regard and respect of all who know him, both as a gentleman and as a legislator.

Congress authorized a just act in voting $2,000 extra compensation to POWELL, for painting his fine picture of Dr. SOYER discovering the Mississippi River; and the unanimity with which it was done must be regarded as a high compliment to the gifted artist, whose production has been attracting admiring crowds in the Capitol Rotunda during the last three weeks.

We received a visit yesterday from an interesting little girl,—who, less than a month since, was a slave belonging to Judge NEAL, of Alexandria, Va. Our readers will remember that we lately published a letter addressed by Hon. CHARLES SUMNER to some friends in Boston, accompanying a daguerreotype which that gentleman had forwarded to his friends in that city, and which he described as the portrait of a real "Lily May,"—a young female slave, so white as to defy the nicest judge to detect in her features, complexion, hair, or general appearance, the slightest trace of negro blood. It was this child that visited our office, accompanied by Mr. CHARLES H. BRAINARD, in whose care she was placed by Mr. SUMNER, for transmission to Boston. Her history is briefly as follows: Her name is MARY MYRTLE BOYER; her father escaped from the estate of Judge NEAL, Alexandria, six years ago, and took refuge in Boston. Two years since he purchased his freedom for $600, his wife and three children being still in bondage. The good feeling of his Boston friends induced them to subscribe for the purchase of his family, and three weeks since, through the agency of Hon. CHARLES SUMNER, the purchase was effected, $600 being paid for the family. They created quite a sensation in Washington, and were provided with a passage in the first-class cars in their journey to this City, whence they took their way last evening by the Fall River route to Boston. The child was exhibited yesterday to many prominent individuals in this City, and the general sentiment, in which we fully concur, was one of astonishment that she should ever have been held a slave. She was one of the fairest and most indisputable white children that we have ever seen.

The March number of MEYER's Monatshefte, the German monthly published in this City, under the editorial supervision of Mr. AD. ESCHENBURG, has come to hand. It is adorned with a steel engraving of LIPPERT, the botanist. The table of literary contents is unusually rich and varied, embracing several well-selected tales from good writers—feuilletons, correspondence, book reviews, &c., and the reproduction, in part, of the course of German lectures which have been delivered in New-York during the present season. We commend it to all lovers of German-American literature.

Affairs at Montevideo—The Brazil Squadron—Blockading, &c. &c.

[Received by Express, Wednesday, Jan. 17, 1855.]

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The Entrepeni war is throwing business in this city into the greatest confusion, not only in a commercial way, but by the stoppage of the mail steamers, both from Liverpool and Southampton, which have been taken off to convey troops. Our American house are affected as well as others, as their correspondence is carried on by the mail monthly, still old England. This adds confusion to the uncertainty of war, and the result is, there is very little movement in coffee, and our vessels are waiting in Montevideo. The English Government appears to care very little for commercial correspondence, as a war-steamer left England for Rio de Janeiro a few days before the regular Southampton mail should have left, and did not even bring the mail that the Liverpool steamer of the 24th November ought to have brought. The last English mail steamer that has arrived on the coast left Southampton November 8.

It is understood that the question of the free navigation of the Amazon is under discussion, between the Brazilian Government and the American Minister resident here, with a hopeful prospect of a favorable termination. It is to be regretted that Col. THORNTON is in such infirm health that he returns nobody's civilities. The American squadron has been on the coast over a year, and not an officer has been presented to the Brazilian Government, and of course there is no intercourse with the authorities on shore. The disadvantage of this non-intercourse was illustrated a few days since. I am informed by good authority, that a boat from the Savannah, flag-ship of the American squadron, went down the harbor to board an American bark, the Maldee, which had just arrived from New-York. While waiting near her for the Health Officer to board, the midshipmen in charge of the boat inquired if she had any letters for the squadron, to which Captain JOHNSON replied he had not. But as the midshipmen was about to pull away, the Captain said, "I have a few papers I will give you," and threw them into the boat. The Health Officer by this time was alongside, and seeing this, told the Captain he would fine him. The matter was immediately reported to the American Commodore, and he having no direct intercourse with the Government in whose waters he is lying, sent next day to the American Consul to attend to the affair. By this time the fine was imposed on the vessel, which, as the frigate was at fault in the matter, she will of course pay. It is a little humiliating that a petty official should have it in his power to cuff an American Commodore. One of these Health Officers is a quite gentlemanly person.

Our latest news from Buenos Ayres is very good. URQUIZA, the President of the Argentine Confederation, has signed a treaty of peace with OBLIGADO, the Governor of Buenos Ayres, which has been strongly accepted by the leading merchants. If this should prove permanent, a brilliant future is before the Buenos Ayrians.

The following, I understand, is the present disposition of the American vessels of war on this station:

The flag-ship Savannah, which arrived here Nov. 28, is spending most of the time in this harbor. She will be absent during February and March at the River La Plata, for which place she sails next week.

The sloop-of-war Germantown, Commander LYNCH, is at Buenos Ayres, where she will remain till the Savannah goes to Montevideo with provisions for her.

The United States brig Bainbridge, Lieutenant Commanding HUNTER, left here two months ago for parts unknown, and as she has not been heard from since, it is conjectured that she has gone to the United States for duty.

The store ship Relief, at the present writing, lies near the Savannah, waiting to take the sick on board and sail for home. She will probably leave about the 20th inst.

The United States steamer Water Witch left Buenos Ayres on the 21st December for Corrientes, taking Acting Lieutenant JEFFERS from the Germantown to join Capt. PAGE's expedition up the Paraguay. "SAM."

Boston News—Correct.

STATE STEP PRISON, CAMP'S OFFICE, Wednesday, March 7, 1855.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

On Monday morning last, upon taking up the New-York Sun, I was surprised to find the following announcement:

"On Saturday last, a person named McGEE, who is confined in the Sing Sing Prison on sentence for killing his wife, had attempt a plan of escape from the prison, with one, or two expected by McGEE to be, provided by another prisoner, THOMAS MOONEY—who worked in the same shop—shed with him. McGEE, determined on revenge, struck MOONEY on the back of the head with a sharp wire hammer, inflicting a frightful wound. The wound is so serious that MOONEY's recovery is considered doubtful.

Allow me to make the correction. No such affair has occurred at this Prison, nor anything upon which the above could have been founded, and the report could only have been started by some one who wished to injure the persons above named, or by some penny-a-liner who was "hard up" for news. This is the second time during the present year we have been called upon to contradict similar statements. I find upon examination of the books, that there is no man at present confined here by the name of McGEE. As for MOONEY, the first he heard of his frightful wound was from the lips of his almost broken hearted wife, who had spent all of her hard earnings to come and see him die.

This practice of manufacturing news out of anything without regard to the feelings of others, has become quite too prevalent. As though it was not enough to be incarcerated within Sing Sing walls, and not have the hearts of friends of convicts made to bleed afresh by false reports of aggravated offences committed while in prison.

By publishing the above you will confer a favor upon those immediately interested, as well as the officers of the Institution.

Yours truly, &c., E. CASE BERRY, Clerk of Sing Sing Prison.

Horrible Murder.

From the Cincinnati Times.

We learn from Mr. TRUMAN CURTIS, residing near California, a few miles above this city, the following particulars of a murder committed in that vicinity on Sunday night last. It appears that for several days past, some flat boats, loaded with iron, had been grounded on the shore about 2 miles above California, and near the residence of Mr. CURTIS. The boats were guarded by two men named MARION TUCKER and HIRAM DOGGETT. There was also a man named JAMES ADAMS employed on the boats. Saturday night the three occupied one room.

During the night ADAMS appeared very uneasy, and was continually walking about, going from the fort to the shore and back again some half dozen times. About 12 o'clock he was told by the others that he must quit running about, as they wished to sleep. He replied that he was going ashore to steal a turkey from some of the farmers; but on being told that he must go to bed, he blew out the light and laid down. About an hour after, TUCKER and DOGGETT heard him get up, and, as they think, set the trigger of the gun. Supposing at the time that he was lighting a match, they remained silent. A moment after they heard the report of the gun, and TUCKER expressed that he was shot. DOGGETT sprang to his feet and grappled with ADAMS; a violent struggle ensued, during which the former received some severe cuts, but finally succeeded in disarming ADAMS, and forcing him to the floor.

In the meantime TUCKER, weltering in his blood, had opened the door and made his way to the shore when, proceeding some two hundred yards up the bank, he fell. DOGGETT then left ADAMS, and went to the house of Mr. EZEL, near by, where he procured assistance, and had TUCKER removed thither. It was found that the ball had entered the back and lodged in his breast. He lived until last evening, when he died. The best of attention was paid to him by the family and the attending physician, Dr. GAYNOR. ADAMS was kept in charge by DOGGETT until the arrival of Constable MARKLEY, by whom he was taken to the jail in this city. The indications point to a premeditated murder, which ADAMS had given to several persons, and something that he had in his pocket. Saturday night this three occupied one room.

TWO CHILDREN BURNED—At Sing Sing, on the 5th inst., two children of Mr. DUGAN were burned—one of them so severely that death ensued soon afterwards, and the other very seriously. Their clothes caught fire while they were playing in the house, during a temporary absence of their mother.

The Reception of Anthony Burns in Boston—Various Accounts.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser, March 7.

A meeting was held in the Tremont Temple last evening, to receive ANTHONY BURNS on his return to Boston. Rev. Mr. GRIMES addressed the audience, congratulating them that BURNS was once more in the land of liberty; and, after a few remarks he sat down, and BURNS took the stand. He said he was glad to meet his Boston friends. He had once before been in Boston. He mentioned having heard, when a boy, of a Northern place where colored men were free, and he thought that when he grew up he would try to get to that Northern place. He prayed to be delivered from bondage. He finally escaped to this land of liberty. He felt when he first stepped on shore that he was in a free land. He then looked round to find something by the to support himself, and soon got employment. Going home one evening, thinking of no harm, he suddenly felt a hand clapped on his shoulder, and some one said, "Stop my old fellow." He looked round, when some man said to him, "You must go with me; you are the one who broke into a store." He said them he was not, but they said "You must" go. He went along peacably, for his conscience felt clear, and they took him up to what they called the jury room. He proceeded to give a narrative of his return again to bondage. When he arrived at Norfolk, they carried him to a prison-house. He was kept there some nights and one day, and was then taken to Richmond where he was again put into prison to await the arrival of his owner. After remaining there some time, he was brought out to be sold at auction upon the public block. After he was put up, it was a quarter of an hour before anything was bid. The company were all looking at him as a curiosity, asking him how he liked Boston, what he thought of the Yankees, &c. At last a bid was made of fifteen dollars. The bidding went on, and he was finally sold for nine hundred and five dollars to Mr. McDOWELL, to go to North Carolina. But he felt deeply in his heart that he should once more see the North. He concluded by thanking his friends for bringing back one poor Ethiopian to the land freedom.

Rev. Mr. KIRK then addressed the audience at considerable length, commenting on the difference between the North and the South. In the North, he who has a black skin is a man, but in the South he is a chattel. He proceeded to speak with great indignation on the Nebraska bill.

When he had concluded, JULIUS A. PALMER, Esq., stated that several other gentlemen were present who had expressed a willingness to speak, but as many were desirous of taking ANTHONY BURNS by the hand, and as it was getting late he proposed that they should sing a Doxology, and then each to desired could have an opportunity to be introduced to BURNS. The Doxology was then sung and the meeting was dissolved.

From the Boston Courier, March 7.

About fifteen hundred persons assembled in the Tremont Temple last evening, to welcome ANTHONY BURNS and congratulate him upon his deliverance from bondage. The price of admission was twenty-five cents—and none of the great promoters of the Abolition party, those men of fortune and learning, who are accustomed to figure at the free banquets of sentiment—were there. At 7:41 o'clock ANTHONY BURNS, attended by Rev. LEONARD A. GRIMES and others came in, and they took seats on the platform. JULIUS A. PALMER, Esq., called the meeting to order, and after a few remarks, introduced Rev. Mr. GRIMES, who gave a history of the efforts made to liberate BURNS. He said that at the time the million of dollars was passed resolutions to raise funds with which to purchase the slave, he wrote to Col. SUTTLE, asking him if he would stand to the promise made to sell him for $1,200. SUTTLE replied that he had been at great expense, had suffered great indignity and would not now sell him for less than $1,500. Mr. GRIMES wrote again, mentioning the gallantry of the Colonel, but he responded that he had fixed his price, and that he would take nothing less. The resolution of the million falling through, the friends of BURNS for a time became disheartened, and their distress was not a little augmented by hearing that he had been sold, with a bond that he should never be "sold North." Upon ascertaining BURNS' locality in North Carolina, letters were addressed to his new master to know whether he would sell him, to which he replied that he would, and fixed the price at $1,200. Half of this was then subscribed by his friends, and the balance was loaned to Mr. GRIMES, who started on the 23d ult. for Baltimore, where he met Mr. DAVID MACDONALD and ANTHONY, at BARNUM's Hotel, on the following Wednesday. No time was lost in dispatching the business for which they met. BURNS was purchased for $1,200. His late master went South, and Messrs. BURNS and GRIMES started for the North. They reached Philadelphia on the night of the day of sale. Their progress hither was stated in the Courier of Monday last.

ANTHONY BURNS was now introduced. He was cordially received. His speech was substantially the same as that delivered at New-York on Friday night last.

Portions of BURNS's speech were really eloquent, and his power of memory and his wit were several times displayed during the evening. He said that the scenes in the auction-room, where he was set up for sale, excited shouts of laughter. He closed with a modest but fervid acknowledgment of his thanks for the great honor that had been conferred upon him on the present occasion, and assured the audience of his gratitude to those good friends who had purchased for him his freedom.

Some one here called out, "Tell us something about LORING," to which ANTHONY replied that he hoped that they would not "intrude on him now."

Rev. EDWARD N. KIRK was next introduced, and he made a very bitter speech against Slavery, which was received with enthusiastic cheers. The ceremonies of the reception closed with the singing of a doxology, and the shaking of hands with BURNS.

The mystery which has veiled the history of this celebrated lady, and which the public eye has vainly endeavored to penetrate, will now be thrown out, and Fanny will be displayed upon the world in all the relations of social life. PUBLISH THIS MORNING:

THE PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY OF THE SEA.

BY M. F. MAURY, LL.D.

Lieut. U. S. Navy.

One vol., 8vo. with Woodcuts and Charts, $1 25.

A philosophical account of the winds and currents of the ocean—of its depth and temperature—of the wonders that are hidden in its bosom, and of the living creatures that inhabited at its surface. The economy of the sea and its adaptations, its salts, its waters, its inhabitants—also pertains to the subject and are amply treated in the present volume. The discussion is well illustrated by charts, and includes many curious details that are rarely touched in the records of science. In the hands of Lieutenant MAURY it assumes a popular interest, no less than scientific importance. His descriptions of the phenomena of the gulf stream, of the currents of the ocean, of the winds, of the Dead Sea, are charmingly practical in their style, besides containing a rich fund of curious and valuable information. It is rarely that a treatise on any branch of physical science is so attractive in its details or so fruitful in its instructions as this volume. It cannot fail to awaken universal interest and admiration.

ABBOTT'S SPRINGFIELD ARMORY.

MARCO PAUL'S VOYAGES AND TRAVELS IN THE PURSUIT OF KNOWLEDGE. By JACOB ABBOTT. Beautifully illustrated. Complete in six vols., 16mo., muslin, 62 cents per volume. The volumes may be obtained separately.

In New-York. In Vermont.
On the Erie Canal. In Boston.
In the Forests of Maine. At the Springfield Armory.

The design of these volumes is not simply to present a narrative of juvenile adventures, but also to communicate, in connection with them, a knowledge of the geography, scenery, and customs of the sections of country over which the young hero is supposed to travel. The various journeyings under the guidance of a well-informed tutor, will take occasion to give him all the information of which he stands in need. The narrative is rendered still further attractive by the introduction of personal incidents which would naturally hold the reader to the story. No boy can be found who can read this series without delight and instruction; and presenting as it does, a vivid commentary on American society, manners, scenery, and institutions, it has a powerful claim to the readers of all ages.

The illustrations will be numerous and in all respects equal to those in the celebrated "Harper's Magazine." The successive numbers of the "Story Books" will embrace a variety of subjects and different styles of composition, including narrative, dialogues, descriptive essays, and entertaining curios of a character to interest and delight the young mind, while imparting information that will be important in subsequent life. It will be the constant aim of the author to furnish a series of volumes adapted to family reading. He hopes so to combine the presentation of important and interesting facts with the circulation of sound principles in taste, morals, and religion, that the "Story Books" shall form a welcome and efficient aid to the work of home education. Though not intended to be of exclusively religious character, they will be so far designed to exert a moral and religious influence on the minds of the young, as to adapt them to the use of Sabbath School Libraries.

STATEN ISLAND AND BARCLAY-STREET FERRIES.

A communication was submitted to the Board from Comptroller Flagg relative to the Staten Island and Barclay-street Ferries. The communication sets forth that C. Vanderbilt's lease, granted on the 13th of June, 1852, for slip foot of Whitehall-street, expires on the 1st of May, 1855. It is provided, this communication states, in the 7th section of the amended Charter that all ferries shall be leased at public auction to the highest bidder, with security, and that notice of the sale thereof shall be given thirty days previous to such sale, the lease to run ten years. In the original lease to Mr. Vanderbilt there is no covenant obligating the Corporation to take the ferry boats and appurtenances thereto belonging, as in many other ferry leases, but it is declared in the 7th section of the amended Charter, that "all persons acquiring any ferry lease under the provisions of this act, shall be required to purchase at a fair appraised valuation the boats, buildings, &c., from lessees, actually necessary for the purposes of such ferry." The passage of a resolution is recommended by the Comptroller, providing that the present lessees shall select one person, the successful bidders another, and if they did not agree, that the Mayor select an umpire. The present lease gives the right of ferriage "to and from the dock on Staten Island, now used as a landing place for such purpose, or such other convenient place as may be selected." If other places than those designated are selected by the lessees, such points should not be permitted without the approval of the Common Council. There is a desire on the part of the persons residing on the Island, that the ferry boats be required to make landings at particular points, and it has been suggested that two ferry slips should be made at the foot of Whitehall-street for the accommodation of two ferries, one for the north and the other for the south end of the Island. If such a change is to be made, a resolution of the Common Council will be needed authorizing the sale of a second ferry, and restricting the present one to the south shore of the Island. The Comptroller says of the ferry lease from the foot of Barclay-street across the North River to Hoboken, that it has expired, and under the Charter of 1853, the franchise of this ferry must be sold at public auction. The lease was granted to Messrs. Stevens, March 30, 1842, for an annual rent of $100, subject to certain rights on the same by the heirs of Wm. Rhinelander. The lease was granted for five years on this condition, and reserved for five years succeeding, and expired in 1852. The City does not own the pier and slip property at the foot of Barclay-street, or on the Jersey shore, hence there is only the ferry franchise to be sold. The lessees of this ferry have the protection of that clause of the Charter relating to the sale of their boats, ferry houses, &c.

The Comptroller calls the attention of the Common Council to the breaking up of the landing for Government boats from Governor's Island at Castle Garden, by the filling up of the Battery grounds. The officers on Governor's Island claim that the United States Government reserved the right of a landing place. The Comptroller recommends that, whether there was such reservation or not, a safe landing-place should be afforded to the Island. Pier No. 1, on the East River, the communication states, is leased to the United States Government until 1866. The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, it further states, have been called on in regard to an absolute sale of such pier, with additional water front, to enable the United States Government to make such improvements as are demanded by the Commerce of the City.

Appended to the communication is the reply of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund to Mr. Redfield, Collector of the port, relative to said pier. The Commissioners, in their reply, deem it necessary that application be made to the Legislature for an act authorizing the sale of the pier to the United States Government. The Commissioners recommend the sale of the pier No. 1, and the L at the end thereof, with the land covered by said pier and L, as the room is now occupied by the United States under lease, with 100 feet of the easterly side of the pier extending from the L, with the adjoining surface of the pier, and the privilege of erecting a Bay office in the angle of the L; with the privilege, in addition to those confirmed by the lease, of extending the outward end of the pier 41 feet into the river of the present pier and L, for the sum of $60,000.

The communication was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Charges against a Police Officer.

Two young men appeared before the Mayor yesterday, in company with a certain officer, to prefer a charge against a boarding-house keeper, residing in Carlisle-street, for overcharge. On Wednesday morning the parties went to defendant's house and engaged board at the rate of $1 per day. They proposed to change their quarters yesterday morning after breakfast, when the bar-tender informed them that their bill was $2 each. This sum they paid, and by advice of the officer sought redress from the Mayor, who decided that the money overcharged should be refunded, which was done.

While before the Mayor, the defendant said that this was the third occasion on which he had been brought to the Mayor's Office on trivial charges by the same officer, who (he said) was determined to persecute him because he did not pay him "black mail." The Mayor inquired what he meant? He replied that the officer had indirectly received money from him and others. The Mayor desired him to be cautious in what he said. He answered that he spoke advisedly, and would make affidavit to that effect, whereupon His Honor handed him over to Col. MING, who took an affidavit to the following effect: That about twelve months ago a fund was collected among the emigrant boarding-house keepers and runners for the purpose of defeating the bill which was before the Legislature "for the better protection of emigrants." This money was to be expended in lobbying at Albany, and bribing officers over to their interests here. That the officer in question received by order of the Finance Committee, (of which deponent was a member,) at the hands of a third party, the sum of $50 as "stooling" money; and that now, as he had no prospect of getting any more, he is carrying on a system of persecutions against deponent.

In making this deposition the deponent gave the names of two witnesses, who afterwards voluntarily appeared, and said they knew nothing of the fund or the substance of the charge against the officer, which is of too grave and serious a character to be allowed to rest as disposed of at the Mayor's Office.

Oral Spirits.

Last evening at Hope Chapel, before a crowded house, Miss EMMA F. JAY, a celebrated speaking medium, delivered a discourse, or rather discussed sociism several questions propounded by the audience, upon the subject of spiritual manifestations, generally, and the corresponding relations of mediums and spirit agents. As to the success of her remarks considered as impromptu, and as to the reality of the alleged invisible dictating spirit, opinions were diverse.

Festival of the New-England Society.

A festival and ball, the proceeds of which were to be appropriated in aid of the New-England Society, was given last evening at the Astor House. The tickets, which were limited to two hundred, were all taken, and the spacious dining-hall which was occupied for the ball presented a brilliant and lively scene. The purposes of the ball being simply of a charitable nature, there were no extra decorations in the room.

☞ All citizens and men of the environs will do well to hold fast to their dollars when they receive notes from unknown friends assuring them that packages of books, preserves, or so forth, have come into their possession—to wit, the unknown friends' hands—which will be forwarded by express on receiving a remittance named. We hear of several clergymen who have come near to being "diddled" by these means. Look out for them—the times are hard.

☞ Mr. J. RUGGLES LANDON commences this evening a course of Lectures on History. They are to be delivered in the Odd Fellows' Hall on Grand-street. He has many friends who will be pleased to hear him—this is their opportunity.

☞ M. DESLANDES has commenced a series of readings from the modern French poets, at Hope Chapel. The next reading is on Monday evening, the 12th instant.

☞ A steamer, the Ocean Bird, is to be placed on a line of communication presently to be opened between this City and Portland, Me. The price of passage is to be $5.

NEW-JERSEY.

Outrageous Conduct.

Complaint is made by a resident of the First Ward, Jersey City, that on Wednesday evening at about 10 o'clock, a man named WILSON, of New-York, in company with two or three others, who were somewhat intoxicated, visited his house and used abusive and improper language to himself and family, to whom they were mostly strangers.

The cause of this conduct on the part of WILSON is the fact that a young lady resides in the family who will not suffer his attentions—he presuming to offer them upon the strength of his acquaintance with a relative of hers, with whom she resided some years ago, when but a child. It was believed, from the threats used on that occasion, that an abduction would be attempted, and the aid of the police was sought; but before the officer was in attendance, the parties had left in the ferry-boat for New-York.

Fire in Hoboken.

At 11½ o'clock last night, a shed in the ship yard, in Hoboken, owned by Messrs. STEVENS, and occupied by ISAAC C. SMITH & SON, was destroyed by fire, together with a small amount of timber and a few tools.

THURSDAY, March 8—P. M.

The demand continues good for State and Railroad Bonds, and a further advance was had in the former, on the sales to-day of ¼@1 ⅌ cent. The aggregate business amounted to $320,000. The market for Road and other shares was generally steady, but not spirited, and the tendency of operations at the Stock Board seems to be to invest money on outside owers, in State and other leading Bonds, rather than to speculate in the fancies. There is no present want of money, or such encouragement as grows out of its abundance, for mere speculative purposes, but there is a feeling of caution or indecision as to the future of financial events, which, for the moment, lessens business of this class. The Street was generally dull to-day, owing, in part, to the absence of the steamer from Europe; and it is possible the same inactivity may continue to-morrow, as we learn that the Pacific may not have reached Liverpool on her outward voyage in season to return on the regular packet day. There is to be a steamer from Havre—the St. Louis—on Saturday, but very little preparation is making to remit by her, either in bills or gold. Sterling Exchange keeps from at 109¼@109¾, and Francs 5.12½@5.13¾. In the discount of paper, the changes this week are in favor of lower rates. Some very short acceptances, prime names, have been taken as low as 5 ⅌ cent., and there is a good deal done at 6 ⅌ cent. 30 to 60 days. Demand loans take the range of 5 to 7 ⅌ cent., most of the business at 6 ⅌ cent. The Bank Note and Domestic Exchange Brokers complain of dull times. The redemption of country circulation at the Metropolitan and American Exchange Agencies is moderate, and the interior Bankers are accumulating large balances in the City.

Our opinion of the circumstances which led to the change in the administration of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of this City, in 1853, by which Mr. JOSEPH B. COLLINS was superseded, without cause, as the President, was freely expressed at the time. The affair caused considerable excitement and discussion for a month or so, and was then dropped, in the hope that whatever might have been the objectionable means under which the change was made, the new management would be conducted with a fair measure of prudence and economy. In general terms, we are not prepared to say that the result has proved otherwise; but as two of the oldest policy holders of the Company, sufficiently interested in the value of their policies to scan the periodical reports of the office, have called our attention to the enormous cost of $82,582 charged against the Expense Account of the year ending 31st January, appearing in the advertised statement of 14th February, we feel authorized, respectfully, to recur to the subject. This sum, on a business in premiums of $642,000, of which about 90 per cent. only was on new policies, is equal to a round commission of thirteen per cent. on the gross receipts from the regular operations of the Company. How such a bill of of expenses has been run up,—whether through the extra efforts of the new administration to increase at all hazards the gross showing of the year, doubling for this purpose the commissions allowed to country agents, and increasing their number, or by paying commissions to drummers and friends of the concern influencing new policies and renewals at home, and by extra rents, salaries, &c., at the principal office,—might be made the subject of information from the office by way of addenda to their recent report. The apology for this suggestion, which we make by request, is found in the facts that the concern now involves $2,000,000, invested by these managers in Bond and Mortgage on Real Estate, for as many as 8,942 policy holders; 7,373 of whom are old customers and ought not to have been taxed as much as 12 ⅌ cent. on the premiums which they voluntarily paid into the office, by way of renewal, unless for reasonable cause shown. On the mutual principle they are all shareholders in the office, and the value and accumulations of their policies is made to rest on the caution and economy of its administration. If the latter principle be entirely disregarded in conducting the regular routine of business, it is not a violent presumption to suspect that the former is lost sight of in some measure, in in making the investment of the moneys of the office.

From the Independent.
